I. NATURE, REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Nature and definition.

Particular contracts distinguished, see post §§ 2-7.

What may be mortgaged and what may be secured, see post § 11 et seq.

Lien of the mortgage and priorities with other liens or claims, see post III.

Mortgage as a lien and not a transfer of title, see post § 61.

Transfer of building as mortgage of it, see also post ¶ 16.

[Note. In so far as the mortgage and the debt secured are but contracts, their nature is that of Contracts or Negotiable Instruments, which see.]

As to the nature of liens in general, see Liens.

¶ 1. A debtor assigned to his creditor certain shares of railroad stock, and at the same time gave a note for the debt, reciting therein that if the said debt and interest is not paid at maturity the railroad stock "hereby assigned to secure the payment aforesaid is to be deemed and taken as forfeit for the above payment." This constituted in legal effect a chattel mortgage of the stock, under which the holder of the note was entitled to possession of the stock certificates.—Davis v. Rider, 5 Mich. 423.

¶ 2. An instrument in the form of a chattel mortgage, containing the usual power of sale, and providing that the mortgagee may take possession whenever he thinks himself insecure, will confer rights on the mortgagee and operate as a valid mortgage.—Wingler v. Sibley, 35 Mich. 281.

¶ 3. A contractor entered into a contract of indemnity with his surety, whereby, in consideration of the suretyship, he assigned to him all his interest in the original contract, with full power to control it and receive all the pay thereon, the surety "becoming responsible for all materials furnished," title to which should pass to him immediately on sale to his principal. Held, that this contract of indemnity only amounted to a mortgage on the materials.—Hurd v. Brown, 37 Mich. 484.

¶ 4. A mortgage made on a building, wherein no description is given of the realty on which the building stands and made with the intention of security on the building, held, to be of a chattel and not of realty.—Nagel v. Schneider, 83 Mich. 407.

§ 2. Mortgage distinguished from other contracts.

Evidence of real character of contract, see post §§ 5, 6.

Character of the contract as a jury question, and instructions as to nature of transaction, see post § 7.

Mortgages amounting to common law assignments, see Assignments for Creditors, § 12.

Liens in general, see Liens.

Security by transfer of actual possession, see Pledges.

Liens created by lease, see Landlord and Tenant, IV, H.

¶ 5. If the instrument is a conveyance upon condition given as security for a pre-existing debt, and contains no trust in its body whereby the property is withdrawn from the right of the mortgagor or others to redeem, or whereby the title of the property is placed beyond the reach of execution as to its surplus, the instrument is a chattel mortgage; but if it conveys the absolute title to a trustee for the benefit of creditors and thus places the property and surplus beyond the reach of creditors, it is a common law assignment.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 6. A writing given by a debtor to his surety for the debt, providing that on failure of the debtor to pay the debt within thirty days the surety may take immediate possession of the goods, etc., in possession of the debtor in the store and premises occupied by him, and sell so much as will pay the debt and a reasonable compensation for his services, and redeliver the balance to the debtor, is not a mortgage, for it does not purport to change, in any way, the title to the property. It is a mere naked power, giving no right in the property itself until reduced to possession.—Holmes v. Hall, 8 Mich. 66.

¶ 7. A stipulation in a lease "that all goods, wares and merchandise, household furniture, fixtures, or other property, which are or shall be placed in or on said premises by the lessee, shall be liable, and this lease shall hereby constitute a lien or mortgage on said property, to secure the rent due or to grow due on this lease," with authority to the lessor, on default of payment of rent, or upon breach of any of the covenants of the lease, to enter the premises and take and sell the property as in cases of chattel mortgages, etc., and to retain the amount of any rent due or to grow due on the lease, together with the costs of sale, etc., is not a mortgage, and conveys no present interest in the property.—Dalton v. Laudahn, 27 Mich. 529.

¶ 8. A stipulation, secured by chattel mortgage on a newspaper establishment, not to use the columns of the paper or permit them to be used to publish matter detrimental to the mortgagee, his reputation or business, the stipulation being unlimited in point of time, and designed to accompany the property into the hands of whomsoever may become purchasers, is held to be too indefinite to constitute the basis of a mortgage lien enforceable by power of sale; effect can be given to it only on a construction which would render it intolerable, and presumably not within the contemplation of the parties.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215.

¶ 9. An agreement whereby A. is to work land for the benefit of B., who is to own and have the crops raised and apply the proceeds upon the indebtedness due to him from A., is not a chattel mortgage, and cannot be shown to be such by parol evidence, and it need not be filed to preserve the rights of the parties under it.—Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319; Haynes v. Ledyard, 44 Mich. 621.

¶ 10. An agreement to repay a loan made to enable the borrower to purchase a stock of goods, out of the first moneys realized from their sale, before paying to the vendor the balace of the purchase price, is not equivalent to an agreement to give a chattel mortgage on the goods.—Finn v. Donahoe, 83 Mich. 165.

¶ 11. An instrument is a chattel mortgage and not a trust or preferential assignment, wherein several places therein it is so designated, which conveys a stock of lumber to a trustee as "security" to be sold in case of default and proceeds applied to the payment of designated creditors, the mortgagor to retain possession until default in promised payments and demand by the trustee, though it contains no defeasance clause.—Belding-Hall Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 125 Mich. 54.

¶ 12. A chattel mortgage is a mere security to the mortgage and not a transfer of title, and under How. St., § 8749o, authorizing a proceeding for a receiver and the marshaling of assets in favor of a labor claimant, in case of a common law or other assignment for benefit of creditors, a chattel mortgage does not per se constitute an assignment within the statute.—Wineman v. Fisher Elec. Mfg. Co., 118 Mich. 636.

§ 3. ——Mortgage or sale of goods.

Sales so-called by parties or disguised by fiction, see post § 4.

Sales transferring possession reserving title, see Sales, XII.

¶ 13. An instrument must be considered a mortgage if, taken alone or in connection with surrounding facts, it appears to have been given as a security; the mere absence of terms of defeasance cannot determine whether it is a mortgage or not.—Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich. 488; Weed v. Mirick, 62 Mich. 414.

¶ 14. A bill of sale taken with the understanding that on the payment of certain notes the goods shall be delivered back, may be found to be a mortgage.—Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 Mich. 623.

¶ 15. A bill of sale, which is in effect a chattel mortgage must, like a chattel mortgage, follow the statute by being filed, in case the donor is a nonresident, in the township or city where the property is at the time the instrument is executed.—First National Bank v. Weed, 89 Mich. 357.

¶ 16. An agreement for the sale of a building standing on leased land, by which the purchaser agrees to pay the purchase price in specified instalments, and to forfeit all claim to the building in case of a failure to make such payments, and upon demand deliver up possession to the vendor, and forfeit all payments made thereon, held to operate as a chattel mortgage.—Read v. Horner, 90 Mich. 152.

¶ 17. A bill of sale given merely for the accommodation of the vendor, and assigned by his direction to secure a loan to himself, will be treated as a chattel mortgage from the vendor to the assignee, and it is no exception to the rule that title does not pass under a mortgage.—Pinch v. Willard, 108 Mich. 204.

¶ 18. A contract for the sale of a stock of goods, reserving title in the vendor until payment of the purchase price, and providing that goods purchased to replace those destroyed, "as well as all others used in the business," shall be subject to the lien of the agreement, operates, as to property subsequently acquired, as a mortgage, and, unless filed as required by statute, is to that extent void as to creditors of the vendee.—Hudson v. McKale, 107 Mich. 22.

¶ 19. Plaintiff's mortgagor, who was indebted to defendant in the sum of $947, was desirous of establishing a creamery, dairy, and commission business, and entered into a contract with defendant, by which, in consideration of his agreement to make advances to the amount of $1,000, including the existing indebtedness, he assigned to defendant a contract for the purchase of the land on which he was erecting a building to be used in connection with the creamery business, and agreed to insure the building and its contents in defendant's favor. The contract provided that the mortgagor should attend to the business for the benefit of defendant, and according to his instructions, but in his own name, and turn over to defendant the net proceeds thereof as often as requested, until the advances and interest thereon should be paid. It was further agreed that the land contract and buildings and improvements, and all apparatus, chattels and merchandise used in connection with the business, were and should remain defendant's property until the mortgagor's agreements were fulfilled, and that on such fulfillment defendant should relinquish all his rights, title, and interest in said property to the mortgagor. The mortgagor continued to carry on the business, and for part of the time with a partner. He made purchases in his own name, added largely to the plant, bought and stocked a farm, and operated it in connection with the business, gave his individual notes, indorsed by others than defendant, and made payments on the land contract, of all of which facts defendant had notice. Plaintiffs' mortgage was given 18 months after the execution of the contract, which was not filed in the proper office, and plaintiffs had no notice or knowledge of its existence. Plaintiffs replevied the mortgaged property from the defendant, who claimed ownership by virtue of the contract. Held, that the contract was a security, merely, and that a verdict should have been directed in favor of plaintiffs.—Damm v. Mason, 98 Mich. 237.

¶ 20. An instrument, in the form of a bill of sale of a stock of goods, providing that in consideration of the sale and delivery of the property the second party agrees to allow the first party as a credit on his indebtedness to the second party a sum equal to that realized from a sale of such property by such second party, less necessary expenses, and stating the indebtedness to be in the form of a certain note which the first party agrees to pay and further providing that any excess of collateral upon the note shall be applicable upon any other note held by such second party, construed as a chattel mortgage, especially where the parties placed such construction upon the instrument.—American Steel & Wire Co. v. Dedrick, 196 Mich. 731.

¶ 21. Filing in the town clerk's office among the chattel mortgages a bill of sale absolute on its face does not estop the vendee from claiming the transfer to be absolute in suit for conversion against judgment creditor of vendor; but the jury may consider such filing in determining whether the sale was absolute or was intended as a security.—Wessels v. Beeman, 87 Mich. 481.

¶ 22. A contract between defendant and a retail piano dealer evidenced an agreement whereby defendant was to consign for sale certain pianos to the dealer, the dealer was to pay all expenses of sale, to report all sales promptly, and to settle for cash sales at the time of settlement of the sale. For pianos sold on instalments, he was to take a lien contract in his own name, and indorse the same to defendant to be retained by him until the amount due for the instrument receipt was given by him to defendant, with interest. The compensation of the dealer was to be the difference in the amount for which the instrument was sold and the cost as represented by the consignment receipt given by him to defendant. Among other provisions, the dealer agreed to carry insurance and to surrender all unsold instruments on thirty days' notice. Held, in a controversy between the trustee in bankruptcy of the dealer and defendant, that the agreement evidenced a consignment for sale and not a chattel mortgage void for the reason that it was not recorded.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 23. An instrument of sale of personal property retaining title in the seller is not changed in its character by the fact that when the buyer became insolvent the seller placed the instrument on file with the township clerk.—American Harrow Co. v. Deyo, 134 Mich. 639.

§ 4. ——Misnamed or disguised sales.

¶ 24. How. St., § 6193, which avoids unrecorded chattel mortgages as against the mortgagor's creditors and subsequent good-faith purchasers or mortgagees, unless accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the mortgaged property, does not permit a transaction which is in substance a mortgage to have the effect of a sale, however disguised, to the prejudice of parties dealing with the debtor, in the absence of the statutory notice to such parties. —Damm v. Mason, 98 Mich. 237.

¶ 25. An instrument purporting to be a bill of sale, but stating that it was given as security for money advanced, reciting a consideration of only $1,200, but purporting to convey articles in process of manufacture and worth $3,000, was construed as only a mortgage.—Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich. 488.

¶ 26. A debtor executed a bill of sale of his stock of goods under an agreement providing that the vendee should furnish not to exceed $1,200 for the purpose of discharging the indebtedness of the vendor, and that the bill of sale should be security for the moneys so to be advanced; that the vendee should resell the stock upon payment by the vendor of $1,600, in monthly instalments; that in the meantime the stock and all additions thereto should remain the property of the vendee; that no indebtedness should be incurred without his knowledge; that the goods should be insured in his favor; and that, in case of his death before the entire $1,600 should have been paid, his representatives should execute a bill of sale to the vendor upon repayment of the amount advanced, with interest. The vendor continued the business for several months, when the vendee took possession. Held, that the absolute title did not pass to the vendee.—Duffie v. Clark, 106 Mich. 262.

¶ 27. A bill of sale may be shown to be a mortgage notwithstanding a statement in it that it is "understood to convey an absolute title."—Wetmore v. Moloney, 127 Mich. 372.

§ 5. Evidence to show nature of transaction.

See also ante ¶ 9.
See also ante ¶ 27.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 6.
Admissibility of parol to vary or contradict the terms of the mortgage, see Evidence, V, A.

¶ 28. A bill of sale of personal property, though absolute on its face, may at law be shown by parol evidence to have been given as a mortgage.—Fuller v. Parish, 3 Mich. 211; Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 Mich. 623.

¶ 29. A bill of sale absolute on its face may in an action at law be shown by parol to have been given as a mortgage.—Pinch v. Willard, 108 Mich. 204.

¶ 30. A defeasance may be proved by parol evidence.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 31. The fact of the vendee's filing a bill of sale is some evidence upon the question whether the instrument was intended as an absolute sale where such filing was needless or as a security where it was necessary as against others.—Black v. Simon, 116 Mich. 382.

¶ 32. Where it is sought to show that an instrument apparently a consignment contract or bill of sale is in reality a chattel mortgage, the circumstances under which the instrument was made as well as the practical construction given to it by the parties in their dealings thereunder may be considered. —Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

§ 6. ——Weight and sufficiency.

¶ 33. Evidence that an instrument in the form of a consignment for sale is in fact a chattel mortgage should be clear and convincing.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 34. It does not require the same amount and strictness of proof to declare a mere unsealed bill of sale a chattel mortgage or security as it does to determine a deed to be a mortgage.—Seligman v. Estate of Ten Eyck, 74 Mich. 525.

¶ 35. That a bill of sale is not a mortgage is not conclusively shown by the fact that upon its execution the vendee surrenders certain notes due him from the vendor.— Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 Mich. 623.

§ 7. Questions of fact and instructions as to nature.

¶ 36. The question whether a bill of sale was meant merely as a security is for the jury under proper instructions.—McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521.

¶ 37. It is error to submit the question whether a bill of sale was meant as a chattel mortgage if there is no evidence tending to show it.—Edwards v. Edwards, 54 Mich. 347.

¶ 38. An instruction to the jury that it is competent to show that a bill of sale, although conveying an absolute title on its face, may have been given by way of security, and that it is competent to show this by parol testimony, is sufficient in the absence of a request for the further instruction that the burden of proof is on the party making such claim to overcome the contrary presumption arising from the face of the paper.—Seligman v. Estate of Ten Eyck, 74 Mich. 525.

Power of married woman to execute mortgage, see Husband and Wife, IV, D.

¶ 39. A mortgage is not necessarily made directly to the beneficiary; the security is always made in trust to secure obligations, and the trust and beneficial interest need not be in the same hands; a mortgage to a third person is as valid as if made to a creditor.—Adams v, Niemann, 46 Mich. 135.

¶ 40. Although a mortgage may modify the loan contract, an irreconcilable contradiction by the mortgage of the terms of the note cannot be allowed to affect the contract as shown in the note, as the indebtedness is represented by the note which constitutes the primary contract.—Ferris v. Johnson, 136 Mich. 227.

¶ 41. Where a mortgagor of chattels inserted in the body of his mortgage on file an agreement, which he signed, "that this mortgage shall cover and be a lien upon all the property above specified, the same for the year 1868 as it did for the year 1867." the mortgage and stipulation were construed together as creating a mortgage.—Grimes v. Rose, 24 Mich. 416.

¶ 42. A chattel mortgage executed by a husband alone upon property a part of which belongs to that class of exempt property a mortgage of which is declared by How. St., § 7686, to be void unless also executed by the wife, is void only to the extent of the exempt property.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 43. The lien held by one who has taken a mortgage for a copartnership is not affected by the fact that the mortgage was made to include the individual debt of a partner, or was fraudulent in law as against a subsequent mortgagee.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594.

Effect of filing as mortgage upon right to claim instrument as bill of sale, see ante § 3.
Estoppel of mortgagor or privy to contest mortgage for failure to file, see ante § 27.
Waiver and estoppel affecting third persons, see post §§ 52-54.
Waiver and estoppel of priority, see post § 85.
Estoppel to claim as real estate mortgage one treated as chattel mortgage, see Estoppel, III.

¶ 44. Plaintiff is estopped in replevin from disputing the validity of a chattel mortgage in the defendant's hands and denying that it stands as security for a note signed by himself and the mortgagee as joint makers where the time of payment was extended by the defendant upon the promise of the plaintiff and the other maker to assign and the subsequent assignment of the mortgage.—Scofield v. Farmer, 125 Mich. 470.

¶ 44a. The presence of the mortgagor at a foreclosure of a fraudulent mortgage is no assent to the sale and no voluntary payment of the purchase money which he alleges to be usury.—Canning v. Harlan, 50 Mich. 320.

B. SUBJECT MATTER AND DEBT OR LIABILITY SECURED.

§ 11. What may be mortgaged.

Sufficiency of description as filed to cover accounts payable, see post ¶ 166.

The distinctions between personal and real property are treated in Property; Real Property; Fixtures. Whenever the question turns on whether the subject matter constitutes personal chattel property, those topics should be consulted.

Assignments for security, and assignability of choses in action, see Assignments, I, §§ 1-11, III, § 23.

Mortgaging of partnership property, and right of one partner to bind the firm, see Partnership, III, IV.

Selection of exemptions by act of mortgaging part, see Exemptions, III.

Loans on salaries, household goods, etc., in certain cities, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6025.

¶ 45. Whether there can be a mortgage of a mortgage of chattels, quaere.—Place v. Grant, 9 Mich. 42.

§ 12. Future property.

Sufficiency of description to include, see also ante ¶ 18.

Inclusion of future goods as making conditional sale a mortgage in effect, see also ante § 3.

Securing future debts, see post § 13.

Accessions and additions to mortgaged property, see post § 18.

Failure to file mortgage as affecting right to future goods, see post § 27.

Filing as protecting after-acquired goods, see post § 43.

Effect of want of filing on future acquisitions, see post ¶ 113.

Sufficiency of affidavit of renewal of mortgage of after-acquired goods, see post § 95.

In so far as mortgagability of future property depends on the transferability of a nonexistent subject matter, see also Assignments, I; Contracts, I, IV; Property.

¶ 46. A mortgage on a stock of goods may be made to cover goods afterwards put in to keep up the stock.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 48. A mortgage on a dealer's stock may be made to cover after-acquired goods; but they must be brought within its descriptive words; and a mortgage drawn to cover goods to be "added to" the stock, or gotten "for use" in the business, will not include goods bargained for but never received at the place of business, or which, on being received, are devoted to some other purpose.—Curtis v. Wilcox, 49 Mich. 425.

¶ 49. Future as well as existing book accounts may be mortgaged; and a mortgage of all future book accounts covers an unpaid account subsequently accruing to the mortgagor, whether or not it is entered upon his books.—Dunn v. Michigan Club, 115 Mich. 409.

¶ 50. Where a mortgage on a stock of goods authorizes the mortgagor to retail in the ordinary course, and requires him to keep up his stock to a specified amount as security to the mortgagee, and keep it insured for his benefit, and is worded to cover all the stock he shall have from time to time in trade, it will authorize the mortgagee to seize and sell such goods as were added to the stock after giving the mortgage, unless rights of third persons have intervened.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 51. Where, after the execution by M. to C. of a mortgage upon a stock of goods and all additions thereto, a third person delivers to M. certain goods under written contracts that title thereto is to remain in the vendor until full payment, held, in replevin by C. against M.'s receiver, that M.'s interest in the latter goods—including, as an incident, the right of possession—was covered by the mortgage.—Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103.

¶ 52. Where a mortgage on a stock of goods contemplates that the stock on hand and all its proceeds shall be bound, though it does not in terms provide for a lien upon future acquisitions, a strong equity is raised in favor of the mortgagee as against the future additions; and though that equity would not prevail against a levy made while it was no more than a general equity, yet where, by valid and formal agreement or otherwise, it had become actually attached to the goods before levy, it would prevail.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

§ 13. What may be secured; future debts.

Mortgage to secure agreement to restrict matter published in newspaper, see ante ¶ 8.
Mortgaging future property, see ante § 12.
Sufficiency of description of debts to be secured, see post § 19.
Necessity of filing the contract secured, see post § 26.
Rights of assignee of mortgage covering future debts, see post § 88.
Increasing amount of loan after levy by third person on mortgagor's equity, see post ¶ 348.

¶ 53. A mortgage may be given to secure the performance of any other act or contract by the mortgagor, or by a third person, besides the payment of money.—Byram v. Gordon, 11 Mich. 531.

¶ 54. A chattel mortgage given to secure an existing indebtedness, and the payment of the price of a bill of goods which the mortgagor has ordered, is valid.—Rosenthal v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 527.

¶ 55. A chattel mortgage given to secure the mortgagee as indorser of the mortgagor's notes is a valid chattel mortgage, and prima facie constitutes security for renewals of the note until the whole amount has been paid. —Meech v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 343.

¶ 56. A mortgage given in good faith to secure future advances agreed to be made by the mortgagee, as well as present indebtedness, is valid.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

§ 14. ——Joint and several debts.

Validity of partnership mortgages, covering firm and several debts, as against third persons, see also post § 56.
Right of foreclosure by joint mortgagees, see post ¶ 460.
Comortgagee's right of action for torts by third persons, see post § 145.

¶ 57. A mortgage to several persons jointly may be made to cover separate debts.—Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135; Walker v. White, 60 Mich. 427; Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

¶ 58. A mortgage upon property of a partnership executed by one member in the firm name to a trustee to secure certain creditors of the firm, setting forth the particular claims secured, is not invalid as to such creditors because made to secure also an individual claim against the partner.—Walker v. White, 60 Mich. 427.

¶ 59. A mortgage given by copartners to secure firm debt is not void because also including private debt of one partner.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594.

§ 15. Description of property.

Necessity of describing and sufficiency of description of after-acquired goods, see ante § 12.
Descriptions of merchandise and trade property, see post § 16.
Of mortgaged animals, see post § 17.
Increase or additions to property described, see post § 18.
Sufficiency of description as jury question, see post § 22.
Sufficiency of description in mortgage as filed to charge subsequent purchaser or mortgagee with notice, see post § 39.

¶ 60. Written descriptions of property are to be interpreted in the light of the facts known to and in the minds of the parties at the time.—Willey v. Snyder, 34 Mich. 60.

¶ 61. The intention of the parties to a mortgage may aid in ascertaining the exact description of the property it is to cover and in applying it thereto.—Cass v. Gunnison, 58 Mich. 108.

¶ 62. The intention of the parties to a mortgage cannot apply the mortgage to property not known to the parties when the mortgage was made.—Cass v. Gunnison, 58 Mich. 108.

¶ 64. A mortgage of "twenty acres of wheat now sown and growing on the ground, and still to be sown, on the twenty acres, this present season of 1886, on the farm," etc., is not void for uncertainty, but covers, as against a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, the first twenty acres sown that season, or as much thereof as was sown when the mortgage was executed.—Wade v. Strachan, 71 Mich. 459.

¶ 65. A mortgage of an undivided half interest in a growing crop of peppermint, a perennial, made by one in possession of the land on which the crop is growing, under an oral contract good for only one year, cannot, as against a lien for distilling the mint and for advances made to mortgagor by the owner of the land, be held valid as to the crop grown by the mortgagor the following year, although the owner knew of the mortgage, and permitted the mortgagor to continue in possession the second year.—Brown v. Bolt, 116 Mich. 52.

¶ 66. Where mortgaged goods are described in the mortgage as "all household and personal effects," and said general description is followed by a specific and minute description of the goods, the latter description limits the former to the property particularly described.—Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106.

¶ 67. Where the description in a mortgage, after enumerating certain articles, goes on with the words, "carpets, bedding, bedroom furniture and other personal property in and about said house and premises; except herefrom such personal property as is exempt from execution by the laws of the state of Michigan, to wit, stoves in use, family pictures, library and school books, clothing provisions, fuel and sewing machine; also, excepting household goods, furniture and utensils therein, of the value of $250"—the mortgagors having more than two hundred and fifty dollars' worth of household goods, furniture and utensils aside from the articles enumerated and those specified as exempt,—it was held that the intention was to mortgage the specific articles unconditionally, and that the general description following the specific enumeration was to give so much further security as the property covered by it would give after deducting from it what was exempt from execution and two hundred and fifty dollars' worth of household goods, furniture and utensils besides.—Giddey v. Uhl, 27 Mich. 94.

¶ 69. The property covered by a chattel mortgage was described as "all the stock in trade, goods, wares, and merchandise, furniture, and fixtures, of every name and nature, situated in the building now occupied by said first party in the village of T., and all goods and wares and merchandise and personal property that may hereafter be acquired by us, and placed in said store building, excepting from the terms and conditions of this mortgage such property as is by law exempt from levy and sale upon execution, hereby reserving the right to make selection of said exempt property." Held, that the description was sufficient to furnish the means of identity.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

¶ 70. A mortgage given by a merchant of "goods in [his] store" will not be held, under these words, to include a safe kept in his store, not for sale, but for his own private use.—Curtis v. Phillips, 5 Mich. 112.

¶ 71. A mortgage on a stated quantity of certain specified kinds of lumber, lying in a specified place, is not void for uncertainty on the ground that the quantity of such lumber at that place is greater than the mortgage calls for, so long as it is all of the same value, and is treated as one mass.—De Graff v. Byles, 63 Mich. 25.

¶ 72. Whether a mortgage upon a quantity of lumber is not void for uncertainty if given before the mortgagors have received the lumber and acquired title to it, and before the portion designated in the mortgagee has been set apart and identified by the selection, from the mass, of other lumber claimed by a creditor, quære.—Cass v. Gunnison, 58 Mich. 108.

¶ 73. An electric light and power company mortgaged certain real estate, together with all buildings, constructions and improvements upon said premises or elsewhere situated, belonging to said company, and all dynamos, engines, boilers, pumps, wells, machinery, tools, instruments, apparatus, and lines of poles, and its business of producing, renting, selling, distributing, and using electricity. Held, that the term "apparatus" includes carbon lamps, stored in the mortgagor's buildings, and not in use.—Ramsdell v. Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co., 103 Mich. 89.

¶ 74. A mortgage on "all the lumber now on hand at said mill, and in transit, belonging to said first parties, being the lumber purchased from said second parties," cannot be made to cover lumber shipped after it was executed, and not identified until shipped.—Cass v. Gunnison, 68 Mich. 147.

¶ 75. A mortgage upon a stated quantity of mixed logs in the drive is void for uncertainty as against third parties who have acquired rights, if it does not furnish the data for separating the mortgaged logs from the mass.—Richardson v. Alpena Lumber Co., 40 Mich. 203.

¶ 76. A mortgage upon a steam saw-mill on certain described land, and upon "five horses, one shingle shed, one yoke of oxen (white or nearly white), one lumber wagon, one pair of trucks, two sets of harness, twelve sets of bob sleighs, and all tools, chains and implements of every kind used in and about said mill," is not void on its face for indefiniteness.—Austin v. French, 36 Mich. 199.

¶ 77. A vendor selling a business under a contract in the nature of a chattel mortgage, held not entitled to take possession of the vendee's bills receivable on the latter's default.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

Increase of animals as part of mortgaged property, see post § 18.

¶ 78. Where several oxen are described in a mortgage as "red, white and blue," the full description need not apply to each.—Fordyce v. Neal, 40 Mich. 705.

¶ 79. The following description in a mortgage is sufficient: "all the cattle, consisting of two yokes, aged six and seven years, color, red, white and blue, * * * and all other property now in our possession in or about said village," etc.—Fordyce v. Neal, 40 Mich. 705.

¶ 80. A description of property in a mortgage as "one Durm bull, known as the Grinnalls bull—said bull is four years old, weight about 2,400 pounds," is not open to the objection that it is so vague and indefinite as to prevent the mortgage, when duly filed, becoming constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser of the bull from the mortgagor.—Willey v. Snyder, 34 Mich. 60.

¶ 81. As against others than the parties to the mortgage, "one sorrel horse" is not a sufficient description under the Canadian statute, which requires that a mortgage of chattels "shall contain such efficient and full description thereof that the same may be thereby readily and easily known and distinguished."—Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

¶ 82. The name of an animal, if it has one, furnishes a description of it, for the purposes of a chattel mortgage. Semble.—Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

§ 18. Additions and accessions.

Rights in commingled goods, see also Accession and Confusion, ¶ 19.
Filing as covering additions, see post § 43.
Fees included in amount required to redeem, see post § 115.
Estoppel of purchasers under mortgage to question its application to accessions, see post ¶ 227.
General law as to accessions or additions to property, and rights of parties on confusion of goods, see Accession and Confusion.

¶ 83. New printing material purchased after the printing establishment has been mortgaged, to supply the wear, decay and destruction of the old, and which has become so commingled with the old as not to be readily distinguished, would be included in the mortgage, and become a part of the mortgaged property by accession; but if so kept separate as to be readily distinguishable, it would not be so included.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215.

¶ 84. The doctrine applicable to a confusion of goods applies where a mortgagor, having added new purchases to the mortgaged stock, refuses on demand to identify and separate the new goods from the old, when the mortgagee is rightfully taking possession; and this is so though there be no such confusion of goods as absolutely to destroy their separate identity, if only they cannot be separated without the mortgagor's aid.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 85. A purchase money mortgage on a pregnant mare covers the colt unless it is weaned before the maturity of the mortgage.—Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 131.

¶ 86. Where one buys a mare on credit and gives a chattel mortgage on her for the entire purchase price, and she is afterwards found to be with foal which is not weaned before the credit expires, he is not entitled to keep the colt if he makes default in payment and the mare is taken on the mortgage.—Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 131.

¶ 87. A description of the property covered by a chattel mortgage as "all of the * * * cattle, calves, * * * now on hand, or that may grow or be raised on our farm during the season," is sufficiently broad to include calves which, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, were carried by cows owned by the mortgagors.—Cleveland v. Koch, 108 Mich. 514.

¶ 88. A chattel mortgage on specific property securing the payment of a certain sum in annual payments during six years and providing that it should cover all other personal property which the mortgagor might own or acquire during such years, is invalid as to subsequent good faith purchasers or attaching creditors, as to property which had no relation to that in possession of the mortgagor at the time of giving the mortgage, but was afterwards acquired outside of the business in which he was then engaged.—Ferguson v. Wilson, 122 Mich. 97.

Effect of conflict or discrepancy between note and mortgage, see ante ¶ 40.
Notice as limited to filed description of claim, see post § 39.
Mistake or excessiveness as fraud on third persons, see post § 58.
Description of condition on which indemnity mortgage shall operate, see also post § 62.
Description and statement of amount due in renewal affidavit, see post § 95.
What mortgage on salaries, household goods, etc., in certain cities must state, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6026.

¶ 89. A mortgage cannot be held invalid as not truthfully describing the indebtedness secured, where, though the real transaction is not set forth in detail, the amount of the indebtedness intended to be secured is correctly stated, and no fraud appears.—Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed. 779.

¶ 90. An objection that a bill of sale is too indefinite and uncertain to have effect as security, in that it fails to state the amount secured thereby, cannot be raised by one who has acquired no valid lien on the property.—First Nat. Bank v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank, 108 Mich. 114.

¶ 91. Where a bill of sale intended as security is given for a specified consideration, and nothing appears upon its face to indicate that it is intended to secure any other or greater sum, the vendor's creditor need treat it as valid only to the amount specified. —Mueller v. Provo, 80 Mich. 475.

¶ 92. A mortgage is not invalidated by the fact that the notes intended to be secured become due at different dates and not at the time fixed by the mortgage.—Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed. 779.

¶ 93. The recital in a chattel mortgage of a desire on the part of the party of the first part, the mortgagor, to secure to "said first party" the payment of the sum named therein does not invalidate the security as to the mortgagor's creditors, where the mortgage acknowledges a consideration received from the party of the second part, and the grant is made to said party.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

¶ 94. A mortgage to cover future advances is valid; and the amount named in a mortgage as consideration does not limit the sum for which the mortgage may stand as security, if from the whole instrument the intent to secure future indebtedness is apparent. Where the plain terms of the instrument evidence such intent they will control, as against the mortgagor's contention that it was the understanding of the parties that the mortgage was security only for the consideration named.—Citizens' Savings Bank v. Kock, 117 Mich. 225.

§ 20. Term and time of payment.

Variance in date of payment between note and mortgage, see ante ¶ 92.
Extension of time of payment as new contract, see post § 97.
Time for redemption, see post §§ 112-114.
Foreclosure upon mortgage stating no time for payment, see post § 124.
Express agreement as to time of foreclosure, see post § 127.

¶ 95. A chattel mortgage that fixes no time when the debt secured becomes due and payable is due at once.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97; Bearss v. Preston, 66 Mich. 11; McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

¶ 96. Where no time of performance of the act or contract secured by the mortgage is specified the omission does not vitiate the contract, but the law steps in and requires performance within a reasonable time.—Byram v. Gordon, 11 Mich. 531.

¶ 97. The presumption that a chattel mortgage debt becomes due immediately where no due date is specified is overcome by implications of a term of credit contained in provisions for interest on the principal "until paid, at the time hereinbefore set forth" where it also contemplates the furnishing of more goods on credit, the continuance of a business, the payment for future purchases at the time when the bills should become due, the insurance and replenishment of the stock and the right of the mortgagor to possession and to sell from it in the course of trade.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

§ 21. Agreements to extend to other debts or property.

Application of collateral agreements, see also post § 62.
Extinguishment of debt by merger, see post § 107.
Release of portion of property from mortgage, see post § 109.

¶ 98. A parol agreement that a mortgage shall cover the indebtedness for goods acquired afterwards will not also cover the debts of a partnership subsequently entered into; a written extension would be necessary.—Parkes v. Parker, 57 Mich. 57.

§ 22. Evidence, jury questions and instructions.

Mortgage note as essential proof of right under mortgage as against third person, see post § 71.
As to subsisting debt secured and as to amount in support of mortgagee's right to possession, see post §§ 71. 72.
General law of evidence and instructions, see Evidence; Instructions.
Admissibility of parol evidence, see Evidence, V, A.

¶ 99. Where a chattel mortgage is given in a stated sum to secure the mortgagee as surety against liability on certain notes given by her for the mortgagor's debts, the notes are competent evidence to fix the amount of the indebtedness.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

¶ 101. Submission to a jury of the question of the sufficiency of the description in a chattel mortgage as a question of fact is error.—Austin v. French, 36 Mich. 199.

¶ 102. It is for the jury to determine whether there was confusion of goods in a stock of general merchandise, or whether all the goods in a store were covered by a chattel mortgage.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

C. REQUISITES OF THE MORTGAGE, AFFIDAVITS AND FILING.

§ 23. In general.

Instruments amounting to chattel mortgages, see also ante § 1.
Necessary parties to the mortgage, trust mortgages, see ante § 8.
Filing as constructive notice, or in lieu of it actual notice or change of possession, to third persons, see post §§ 35-42.
The contract requisites as to parties, offer and acceptance, legality, and consideration, when governed by principles common to all contracts, will be treated in Contracts, II-V.
Necessity of change of possession, filing or notice as against third persons, see post I, D.
The general requisites of contracts of whatsoever kind are treated in Contracts, which see.

¶ 103. That a chattel mortgage of a stock of goods to secure the mortgagor's present and future obligations to a bank runs to the bank's cashier individually instead of to the bank, cannot be raised as an objection by the mortgagor's receiver when sued in replevin, where it appears that the purpose of the mortgage was fully understood, not only by the mortgagor but by his creditors, that all of the business was done through the cashier, and that no one has been injured by the mortgage not running directly to the bank.—Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103.

The general law governing the signing, attestation, delivery, and acceptance of instruments inter partes is treated in the topic Execution of Instruments.
What constitutes sufficient delivery and acceptance, see Execution of Instruments, III.
Evidence to prove acceptance or delivery of the instrument, see post ¶ 246, and see generally Execution of Instruments, III.
Execution of mortgage of corporate property, see Corporations, XIII, D, XV.
Necessity of signature of wife to cut off exemptions, see Exemptions, IV.

¶ 104. A chattel mortgage need not be under seal.—Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 107.

¶ 106. Where a duly filed chattel mortgage was signed by both husband and wife, it was immaterial as to the question of priority what financial relations existed between the mortgagors, or whether she had or had not any interest in the property mortgaged; since her signature was either formal and of no consequence or was substantial as that of a comortgagor.—Eddy v. McCall, 71 Mich. 497.

Defect in affidavit as filed, see post § 26.
Renewal affidavit, see post § 95.
General law of affidavits, see Affidavits.
Necessity of affidavit filed with conditional sale, see Sales, XII.
Necessity of filing affidavit of good faith, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11988; see also Pub. Acts 1915, No. 163.

¶ 108. An affidavit attached to a chattel mortgage, where sworn to, is valid although not signed by affiant.—Rameau v. Valley, 168 Mich. 569.

As to whom filing is requisite, see post §§ 27, 44 et seq.
As to what character of property filing is requisite, see post § 28.
Instruments or mortgages affecting realty as well as personalty, see post § 29.
Place and time for filing, see post §§ 30, 31.
Character of instrument, mortgage required to be filed or other contract not requiring filing, see ante §§ 2-4.
Actual notice or change of possession as equivalent to charge third persons, see post §§ 37, 38, 40-42.
Filing as constructive notice to third parties, see post § 39.
Persons affected with notice, see post §§ 44-49.
Necessity of renewal, see post § 92.

¶ 109. Act No. 258, Pub. Acts 1905, governing the making and recording of chattel mortgages, must be strictly complied with to render the same valid.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

¶ 110. Where a mortgage was given to secure the performance of a written agreement, the latter was held to be no part of the mortgage, and therefore not required to be filed with it in order to render the record notice to third persons,—Byram v. Gordon, 11 Mich. 531.

¶ 111. Act No. 258, Pub. Acts 1905, provides that a chattel mortgage shall be void unless recorded, and before it shall be recorded an affidavit must be made by the mortgagor that the consideration for the instrument is actual and adequate, and that the mortgage is given in good faith. A mortgagor made such affidavit and recorded the mortgage, but the notary failed to fill in the jurat. Held, the mortgage was void as against a previous creditor.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

¶ 113. A mortgage of a stock of goods made August 31, 1875, which covered expressly not only all goods then in store, but all other goods to be thereafter put there, and which was not filed till November 4, 1875, is held valid as between the parties to bind goods purchased by the mortgagor, and added to the stock in the store on October 4, 1875.—American Cigar Co. v. Foster, 36 Mich. 368.

Future acquisitions, see also ante ¶ 113.
Filing where property is realty in character, see Notice and Record of Title, II, E.

¶ 114. How. St., § 6193, providing for the filing of chattel mortgages, does not apply to a mortgage of accounts.—Farrell Foundry & Machine Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 93 Mich. 582.

¶ 115. An assignment of open accounts as security for a debt need not be filed as a chattel mortgage and is not void as against other creditors for want of such filing; How. St., § 6193, providing that every mortgage or conveyance intended to operate as a mortgage of goods and chattels which is not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual change of possession shall be void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers unless recorded, applies only to mortgages of goods and chattels that are capable of delivery.—Preston National Bank v. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 84 Mich. 364.

¶ 116. An assignment of open accounts as security need not be recorded or filed, but is valid without filing if made bona fide, and without intent to defraud.—McDonald v. Preston Nat. Bank, 111 Mich. 649.

¶ 117. R. S. 1846, chap. 81, tit. 19, § 10, How. St., § 6193, avoiding chattel mortgages not filed, is inoperative as to mortgages upon enrolled vessels.—Robinson v. Rice, 3 Mich. 235.

¶ 118. Mortgages upon enrolled and licensed vessels need not be filed in township or city clerk's office to be valid, and no presumption of fraud arises from failure to file them there.—Haug v. Third Nat. Bank, 77 Mich. 474.

¶ 119. A mortgage on a United States vessel recorded in the office of the collector of part of the city of Detroit, where she was duly licensed as required by the federal statute is valid despite the fact that the mortgage was not registered in the city clerk's office of Detroit and that she had abandoned for two years the coasting trade for which she had been licensed during which time she had been employed as a local ferry.—Fleming v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 147 Mich. 404.

§ 29. ——Real estate transfers covering personalty also.

Effect of filing or record with real estate mortgages, see post ¶ 130.

¶ 120. A., the vendee in land contracts from B. and C. giving no possessory rights until fully paid up, defaulted on both contracts and entered into another contract with B. by which B. was to make advances to A., B. taking an assignment of the C. contract to secure his own first contract and his advances. Afterwards B. paid what was due on the C. contract and took a deed from C., which was in effect a mortgage, held as security against A. Subsequently D., who was getting out lumber from the two tracts, received A.'s order to hold the lumber for B. and agreed to do so. Held, that B.'s claim to the lumber need not have been filed as a chattel mortgage, and that it was superior to the claim of a chattel mortgagee from A.—Gamble v. Ross, 88 Mich. 315.

¶ 121. Under How. St., § 6193, which requires chattel mortgages executed by nonresidents of this state to be filed in the office of the clerk of the township "where the property is," such filing must be in the township where the property is situated at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage, and not in some other township or city to which the property may be removed after such execution and delivery.—First National Bank v. Weed, 89 Mich. 357.

¶ 122. A chattel mortgage must be filed in the town where the mortgagor resides.—Reynolds v. Case, 60 Mich. 76.

¶ 123. The record of a mortgage made and duly filed in another state or country is of no avail when the property is brought into this state.—Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143; Boydson v. Goodrich, 49 Mich. 65.

¶ 124. A mortgage not filed according to the laws of Michigan when the property is brought into the state is inferior to a levy of attachment.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 125. Where the members of a firm have their actual and permanent residence in one place, but transact their business at another, where they board for part of the year, but with no intention of changing their domicile, a mortgage given by them should be filed at their permanent place of residence.—Briggs v. Leitelt, 41 Mich. 79.

¶ 126. A mortgage made by partners is not filed where the mortgagors or either of them "resides" if filed in a town where they do business, but where one does not live and the other expects to live but has not yet brought his family to live.—Cass v. Gunnison, 68 Mich, 147.

¶ 127. A partnership having a definite local abiding place may be said to reside there for the purpose of determining the proper place under the statute for filing a chattel mortgage given by the firm in the firm name, and which is strictly a partnership incumbrance.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 128. Where a partnership mortgage made in the firm name, signed by the resident partner alone (the other partner residing in another state), and covering only firm property, was filed in the office of the clerk of the township where the resident partner resided, and where the seat or abiding place of the former was located, it was held valid and operative, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4706, How. St., § 6193, as to property described in it and situated in another township and county.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 129. A mortgage, where possession is not given, is void as against the mortgagor's creditors, if not put on file in the proper office, even though recorded elsewhere by mistake.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 130. A chattel mortgage included in a mortgage of land and recorded therewith in the office of the register of deeds, but not filed with the city clerk, is void as against the claim of the mortgagor's execution creditors who did not know of its existence when they gave credit to the mortgagor.—Ramsdell v. Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co., 103 Mich. 89.

¶ 131. A mortgage which had been properly filed as to a portion of the property covered by it would not be rendered inoperative as to such property by the fact that it was not properly filed as to other distinct chattels described in it and situated elsewhere. A conveyance or incumbrance may be bad as to a part of the property which is the subject of it and good as to the residue.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 132. The purpose of Comp. L. 1871, §§ 4706-4708, How. St., § 6193, in requiring chattel mortgages to be filed, is not merely to give notice to creditors and purchasers, but chiefly to show the transaction to have been actual and genuine, and to prevent secrecy and imposition, and to remove the presumption otherwise arising against good faith.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 133. The statute providing for the filing and renewal of chattel mortgages was intended to do away with the necessity of delivery, and to enable the mortgagor to retain possession until default.—First National Bank v. Summers, 75 Mich, 107.

Filing in wrong book or place, see ante ¶¶ 129, 130.
Notice imputed by the filing, see post § 39.
Sufficiency of record of renewal, see post § 96.

¶ 134. A mortgage cannot be taken from the files in the town clerk's office; it is a part of the public records; a certified copy of it will serve to show the filing, and to use in taking possession of the goods covered by it.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615.

¶ 135. A chattel mortgage properly filed is a public record, and belongs to the office; and the clerk has no right to deliver it to the mortgagee to be taken away.—Woodruff v. Phillips, 10 Mich, 500.

¶ 136. One having a mortgage on file in the city clerk's office took it away for a few days, and without his knowledge the clerk made an entry in the file book that the mortgage had been delivered to the mortgagee. It was held that this entry was unofficial, and did not enable one who had bought the mortgaged property to hold it as against the mortgage, which had been returned to the files before his purchase had been made.—Woodruff v. Phillips, 10 Mich. 500.

¶ 137. A mortgage, properly filed and, afterwards, unlawfully delivered by the clerk to the mortgagee, needs no second indorsement of filing by the clerk on its return to make it notice thereafter under the statute. —Woodruff v. Phillips, 10 Mich. 500.

¶ 138. Although the indorsement of filing upon a chattel mortgage is made by a deputy clerk for whose appointment the city charter does not provide, yet where such mortgage is actually deposited among the files in the city clerk's office, and an entry of the filing made in the record book, such entry and filing are sufficient and constitute notice of the mortgagee's rights.—Keating v. Retan, 80 Mich. 324.

¶ 139. Where a mortgage is at once duly filed with the town clerk, who receives and properly indorses it, without receiving or demanding his statutory fees, the fact that the town clerk, being himself the mortgagor, neglects to enter the same as required upon the alphabetical index, or to place the instrument in the files of mortgages, cannot invalidate the mortgage; the remission of the fees, or giving credit therefor, concerns no one but the officer, and the mortgagee, having done all that the statute requires of him, cannot be prejudiced by the failure of the officer to do his duty.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

Invalidity of unfiled mortgages as against third persons having no notice, see post §§ 35, 36.
Filing, actual notice, or change of possession as equivalents for purpose of affecting third persons, see post §§ 37-42.
Lien and priorities in general, see post III.
Lien, priority and effect of mortgage relatively to other lienor or claimant, see post III.

¶ 140. A mortgage not filed or one followed by continued possession is void as against subsequent rights.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 280.

Immateriality of good faith, see post § 36.
Change of possession and sufficiency of change to dispense with recording, see post §§ 40-42.
Validity of unfiled mortgage as against creditor of adverse claimant, see post § 50.
Withholding from files as fraud, see post § 55.
Priority between unrecorded mortgages, see post § 82.
Renewal of unrecorded mortgage, see post § 99.

¶ 141. An unrecorded chattel mortgage given before the inception of the claim of a creditor is invalid as against such creditor, where there has been no change of possession as between mortgagor and mortgagee. —O'Neil v. Brooks, 180 Mich. 540.

¶ 142. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9523, an unrecorded bill of sale intended as a mortgage not accompanied by any change of possession is void as to persons extending credit to the seller in good faith without knowledge of its existence.—Sachs v. Norn, 139 Mich. 357.

¶ 144. Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich. 488, holding that an unfiled mortgage of chattels is absolutely void as against creditors or subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, unless there is an immediate delivery and an actual and continued change of possession of the property, seems to be overruled by later decisions. —Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 145. Since the statutes make no provision for filing a nonresident's chattel mortgage, the necessity of possession by the mortgagee is not dispensed with in such a case. —Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

¶ 145a. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4192, in reference to recording mortgages upon enrolled and licensed vessels, supersedes the state statute in regard to filing chattel mortgages, and no presumption of fraud that would arise under the state law because of failure to file them can prevail against their validity.—Haug v. Third Nat. Bank, 77 Mich. 474.

¶ 146. If a bill of sale of a shingle-mill is taken as security for its owner's debts, but the mill is left in his possession, a copy of the bill must be filed at once or the property cannot be protected by it against other creditors of the owner, whose good faith alone will not protect the unrecorded transfer (How. St., § 6193).—Talcott v. Crippen, 52 Mich. 633.

¶ 147. The intentions or suppositions of the parties to an instrument which is in effect a conveyance, to be defeated on the payment of certain indebtedness, as to who should be regarded as holding the title, cannot avail as against subsequent mortgagees in good faith, in the absence of the continued change of possession or notice required by How. St., § 6193.—Damm v. Mason, 98 Mich. 237.

¶ 148. Under How. St., § 6193, the question of good faith and absence of intent to defraud creditors is immaterial; the mortgage is void as against creditors or subsequent purchasers or mortgagees unless the filing or change of possession takes place. How. St., § 6190, making such failure only presumatively fraudulent, applies to absolute sales and assignments and not to chattel mortgages or to assignments of personalty by way of security.—Cooper v. Brock, 41 Mich 488; Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 Mich. 623.

¶ 149. By virtue of the statute (How. St., § 6193) filing is not essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage as against a vendee having actual notice.—Read v. Horner, 90 Mich. 152.

¶ 150. Dictum, that as to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, notice of a chattel mortgage is equivalent to filing.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

¶ 151. In an action involving notice of a chattel mortgage alleged to have been recorded in a township other than that of the mortgagor's residence, an instruction that actual notice of the mortgage is just as efficacious as notice as is the filing, is proper. —Loeser v. Jorgenson, 137 Mich. 220.

¶ 152. Notice to a creditor of the existence of a chattel mortgage is not sufficient to make it valid, when under the law it is invalid, either from failure to file it properly or failure to change possession.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

¶ 153. Being notified of a prior mortgage at the time of taking a conveyance of or lien upon the property, the subsequent purchaser is put upon inquiry as to the extent of the prior mortgage, and takes subject to its amount.—Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87.

¶ 154. The notice to a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of a prior unrecorded lien upon chattels must be so clear and distinct as to render it bad faith in the second mortgagee to insist upon his mortgage in preference to the former because recorded first.—Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87.

¶ 156. A member of a creditor firm was called from his house at 10 p. m. to a lawyer's office, and was there informed that his firm's debtors were in trouble and desired to give a mortgage, as they had promised to protect the firm. Thereupon a mortgage was executed, reciting that the goods were free from incumbrances except those named therein. Held, that a failure to make further inquiry would not charge the mortgagees with notice of a mortgage executed earlier on the same day.—Millar v. Olney, 69 Mich. 560.

¶ 156a. An attorney's knowledge of the existence of a chattel mortgage filed by mistake in the wrong office is notice to his client who has an account against the mortgagor which is put into judgment by such attorney after such filing.—Littauer v. Houck, 92 Mich. 162.

§ 38. ——Taking subject to mortgage or incumbrances.

Estoppel by recognizing or assumption of debt, see post § 53.

¶ 157. Where a mortgage contains a clause showing that it is made subject to a prior one, filing is unnecessary to maintain such priority, which can never be secured for the second mortgage as against the first except by agreement of the parties.—Flory v. Comstock, 61 Mich, 522.

¶ 158. The creditors of one who buys mortgaged goods, assuming the mortgage, cannot complain that the mortgage is invalid for want of filing.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Lumber Co., 69 Mich. 127.

¶ 159. A purchaser of property which was subject to a chattel mortgage, could not avoid such mortgage because it was not filed at the place of residence of the mortgagor, where he had notice of the mortgagee's claim.—Soule v. Harrington, 135 Mich. 155.

¶ 160. Where a second mortgage is taken subject to a prior one duly filed, given to secure a debt of a firm of which the second mortgagee was a member, the nonrenewal of the prior mortgage cannot give priority to the second, executed by the other partner.—Flory v. Comstock, 61 Mich. 522.

¶ 161. Where a mortgaged chattel is advertised for sale and sold subject to the mortgage, purchasers have sufficient notice of the mortgage to estop them from contesting it on the ground that it was not duly placed on file.—Kellogg v. Secord, 42 Mich. 318.

¶ 162. Advertising and selling a chattel subject to a mortgage thereon is, to purchasers, such notice of the mortgage as dispenses with filing.—Kellogg v. Secord, 42 Mich. 318.

Filing to constitute notice, see ante §§ 26-31.

As to what property filing gives notice, see ante § 28.

Knowledge of mortgage filed in wrong place, see ante ¶ 156a.

Persons affected with notice, see post §§ 44-49.

Priority by filing, see post § 81.

¶ 163. A subsequent mortgagee of chattels is presumed to have notice of a prior mortgage on file.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594.

¶ 164. A mortgage was given in evidence which purported to be given to secure a certain promissory note. A note of the description was not produced, but one of a different date was offered as the one designed to be secured. It was held that the filing of the mortgage was not notice of any claim other than the one described in it.—Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich. 508.

¶ 165. The subsequent purchaser or mortgagee is sufficiently charged if the description is such as upon proper inquiry suggested by the description can apply only to the mortgaged chattel; he is required to see that the property which he takes is correctly described and cannot rely on the fact that the name given in the mortgage is not the one by which he takes it.—Willey v. Snyder, 34 Mich. 60.

¶¶ 166, 167. Where a chattel mortgage had been executed by the principal defendant, and duly filed, to secure existing and future indebtedness, and covering future-acquired property, and also all notes and accounts due or to become due the mortgagor, which the mortgagees were authorized to collect, it was held that such mortgage was notice to plaintiffs, and to all other persons, of the rights of the mortgagees in the property covered by said mortgage; and that under it they were entitled to receive from the garnishee defendant the sum of $600 due the mortgagor, on book account, arising largely from the purchase of posts, wood and ties which were owned by the mortgagor at the time he executed the mortgage, it appearing that the mortgagees intended to retain their lien on said property to secure the payment of the indebtedness secured to them by said mortgage.—Fuller v. Rhodes, 78 Mich. 36.

Rights of possession between mortgagor and mortgagee, see post II, A.

Right of mortgagee to possession, see post § 67,
Taking possession as equivalent of renewal of mortgage, see post § 92.
Necessity of change of possession, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11985.

¶ 168. A second mortgagee of personal property in possession of a prior mortgagee takes with notice of all the rights of such prior mortgagee.—Grimes v. Rose, 24 Mich. 416.

¶ 169. The rights of a vendor who has taken possession of all the property with the consent of the vendee, under a bill of sale intended as security for the payment of the unpaid purchase money, and who is in possession when the vendee executes a chattel mortgage to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, are superior to those of the mortgagee or his assignee, although the bill of sale is not filed at the time of the execution and filing of the mortgage.—Finn v. Donahue, 83 Mich. 165.

¶ 170. A claim that the possession of chattels is that of the managing partner of a partnership, and at the same time that such person has possession as the mortgagee in an unrecorded mortgage, is inconsistent when the rights of subsequent mortgagees are concerned.—Vining v. Millar, 121 Mich. 235.

§ 41. ——Sufficiency of change.

Making mortgagor agent or bailee of mortgagee, see post § 42.
Time for change and effect of tardy change, see post § 48.
Question of fact, see post § 60.
Necessity of possession of vessels at sea or abroad, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11987.

¶ 171. The change of possession required by How. St., § 6193, where the mortgage is not filed, must be an open, visible and substantial change, and such as to give notice to the public that there has been an actual change of interest or ownership, and, in case of bulky property, such as lumber, must be such as is practicable.—Smith v. Greenop, 60 Mich. 61.

¶ 172. Where the lessee of mortgaged chattels is allowed to remain in actual possession thereof, an assignment of the lease by the mortgagor to the mortgagee's assignee does not constitute such a change of possession as dispenses with filing and renewal.—First Nat. Bank v. Summers, 75 Mich. 107.

¶ 173. Where only symbolical delivery of mortgaged chattels can be made, and they are left where the right of possession is uncertain, doubts must be decided in favor of creditors and against the mortgagee, since he could have protected himself fully by filing the mortgage.—Anderson v. Brenneman, 44 Mich. 198.

¶ 174. If a mortgagee of chattels takes possession in the mortgagor's behalf before foreclosure to screen the property from execution, it is fraud; and if, having a mortgage claim, he sets up some other against creditors levying on a mortgaged interest, or if not in possession in good faith under his mortgage claim, fraud may be inferred. If the change of possession from the owner is not actual, his security would be absolutely void as against an execution levy, and if he is a purchaser the purchase would be presumptively fraudulent.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 175. Where articles are of that bulky nature that a symbolical delivery only can be made, and they are permitted to remain in a place where the possession may be equivocal, or what could not be said to be an actual possession, all doubts must be solved in favor of the purchaser or creditor, and against a mortgagee who has failed to file or renew his mortgage.—First Nat. Bank v. Summers, 75 Mich. 107.

¶ 176. The appointment of the clerk of the mortgagor as agent of the mortgagee, for the purpose of taking care of and selling the goods, where there is no announcement of change in business, no change of books, and no other apparent change in ownership or possession, is not a change of possession within the meaning of R. S. 1846, p. 327, § 10, How. St., § 6193.—Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87.

¶ 177. Where a debtor delivered two teams of horses with harnesses to a creditor to use at a stipulated rate per month until the indebtedness was liquidated and such property was subsequently seized under an execution by a second creditor and sold to defendant, after which it was replevied by plaintiff under an unrecorded chattel mortgage given before inception of the claim of the execution creditor, held that the delivery of the property to the first creditor under the contract of bailment did not constitute such a change of possession as to obviate the necessity of recording the chattel mortgage.—O'Neil v. Brooks, 180 Mich. 540.

¶ 178. Where a stock of goods, which had been attached by creditors of the mortgagor, is replevied by the mortgagee within one year of the date of the filing of the chattel mortgage and while such mortgage is in full force, and possession is taken by the mortgagee, the recording acts do not thereafter apply, if the property is not again put in the possession of the mortgagor.—Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed. 779.

§ 42. ——Making mortgagor agent in possession.

Making mortgagor's clerk agent, see ante ¶ 176.
Reservation of power of sale as fraud, see post § 55.
Right to possession under the mortgage, see post §§ 65, 66.

¶ 179. Mortgages permitting the mortgagor to sell or dispose of the goods in the ordinary course of trade are valid.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28; Wingler v. Sibley, 35 Mich. 231.

¶ 180. A mortgage of a stock of goods which leaves the mortgagor in possession, and by inference allows him to make sales in the usual course of business, is good between the parties and not necessarily void as to creditors.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519; Oliver v. Eaton, 7 Mich. 108.

¶ 181. A mortgage on a stock of goods is not made void by a proviso that the mortgagor "shall be allowed to continue the sale of goods from said store as though this instrument was not made."—Wingler v. Sibley, 35 Mich. 231.

Estoppel to question sale of after-acquired goods, see post § 140.

¶ 182. A duly filed chattel mortgage covering certain specified property and all other property which the mortgagor may thereafter add to and use in a particular business is valid even as to third persons, e. g., subsequent creditors attaching the after-acquired property.—Eddy v. McCall, 71 Mich. 497.

¶ 183. Where the purchaser of merchandise mortgages it to a third person in order to pay the vendor and so obtain title and the mortgage is given, payment made and goods delivered on the same day, the mortgage will not be regarded as given on after-acquired property; and if duly filed the mortgagee can bring trover against a purchaser.—Greenaway v. Fuller, 47 Mich. 557.

¶ 184. A mortgage upon after-acquired goods will hold against a seller who took them back in satisfaction of a debt for the price with notice of the mortgage; he can have no better title than the buyer.—Robson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 37 Mich. 70.

¶ 185. The lien of a chattel mortgage covering all additions to and substitutes for the property described in the mortgage will not attach to goods ordered by the mortgagor before giving the mortgage, and which never actually came into his possession as owner.—Kingman & Co. v. William C. Denison and McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 84 Mich. 608.

¶ 186. A vendee, though a bona fide one, is liable in trover if he refuses to deliver up the goods to one who holds a mortgage, of which the vendee has notice, that includes them as after-acquired property.—American Cigar Co. v. Foster, 36 Mich. 368.

¶ 187. Under How St., § 6193, providing that every mortgage, or conveyance intended to operate as a mortgage, of goods and chattels, which shall not be accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, shall be absolutely void as against creditors of the mortgagor, unless the mortgage, or a true copy be duly recorded, a chattel mortgage on a dock, the possession of which is retained by the mortgagor, is invalid as against an execution levied on the property before recording of the mortgage thereon.—Tuck v. Olds, 29 Fed. 738.

¶ 188. Withholding a chattel mortgage from files operates as a fraud on persons who become interested as stockholders in property which they have no reason to suppose incumbered.—International Wrecking & Transp. Co. v. McMorran, 73 Mich. 467.

¶ 189. An indemnity contract, executed by a contractor to his surety, purporting to be a bill of sale but in effect a mortgage, since it was not filed, does not protect the materials sold to the contractor before the execution of such contract from seizure on execution.—Hurd v. Brown, 37 Mich. 484.

¶ 190. The term "creditors," as used in How. St., § 6193, avoiding unfiled chattel mortgages as against creditors of the mortgagor, includes those who have entered into contracts with parties as indorsers, guarantors or sureties. So held where a bank accepted an indorser without notice or knowledge of the existence of an unfiled chattel mortgage on his property, but which was filed before the contingent liability of the indorser was fixed by the protesting of the note.—Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627.

¶ 193. A mortgage is invalid as against creditors if not put on file when the goods remain in the mortgagor's possession; this applies to those who become creditors during the interval while the mortgage is not on file, and not merely to those who have obtained judgment or levied attachment before filing.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376; Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 194. As against creditors of the mortgagor who have given or extended credit without notice of an existing unfiled chattel mortgage, such mortgage is void.—Root & Co. v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420; Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606; Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627; Kennedy v. Dawson, 96 Mich. 79.

¶ 195. Any creditor may avoid an unrecorded chattel mortgage who, during its absence from the record, has done anything on the basis of its non-existence—such as giving new or extending old credits, and renewing notes or other obligations.—Root & Co. v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420.

¶ 196. A chattel mortgage given in good faith by a mother to her son to whom she was then indebted is not to be postponed to an attachment subsequently levied in favor of other creditors for pre-existing debts.—Dalton v. Stiles, 74 Mich. 726.

Necessity for renewal, see post § 92.

¶ 197. A second mortgagee who has notice of the existence of the prior mortgage at the time of taking his own is not a subsequent mortgagee in good faith, within the meaning of the statute.—Wetherell v. Spencer, 3 Mich. 123; Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87.

¶ 198. The words "mortgagee in good faith" in How. St., § 6193, relating to the filing of chattel mortgages, mean the same thing as "mortgagee for a valuable consideration without notice."—People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

Rights under sale subject to mortgage lien, see post § 76.

Subsequent purchasers entitled to protection by renewal, see post § 92.

¶ 199. Comp. L. 1871, § 4706, How. St., § 6193, in making an unfiled chattel mortgage void "against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith," is for the benefit of those only who have acquired rights of which they might otherwise be defrauded, and is meant to protect them against instruments of which they had no notice when they obtained their rights; one who has not paid is not protected, and one who has paid is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser only to the extent of payments made before notice.—Kohl v. Lynn, 34 Mich. 360.

Withholding from files as fraud, see post § 55.

Priorities of credits extended during withholding, see post ¶ 340.

Effect of tardy renewal, see post § 92.

¶ 200. A mortgage not seasonably filed is absolutely void—where there is no change of possession—as against third parties whose rights have intervened between its making and filing.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386; Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606.

¶ 201. A chattel mortgage given in good faith is void for want of immediate possession of the goods only where rights have arisen in consequence, or injury resulted, in the interval before possession is given.—Waite v. Mathews, 50 Mich. 392.

¶ 202. Where a mortgage was not filed until some time after delivery the only creditors who could assail it as void were those who had acquired rights during the interval.—Johnson v. Stellwagen, 67 Mich. 10.

¶ 203. The statutory invalidity of an unfiled chattel mortgage extends to all creditors who became such after the giving and before the filing of the mortgage.—In re Huxoll, 103 Fed. 851; Detroit Trust Co. v. Pontiac Sav. Bank, 196 Fed. 29, affirmed in 237 U. S. 186, 59 L. ed. 907, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509.

¶ 204. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9523 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11407), providing that every chattel mortgage "which shall not be accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things mortgaged, shall be absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor," the statutory invalidity of an unfiled chattel mortgage extends to all creditors who become such after the giving and before the filing of the chattel mortgage.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Pontiac Sav. Bank, 237 U. S. 186, 59 L. ed. 907, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; affirming 196 Fed. 29.

¶ 205. The failure to file a chattel mortgage makes it invalid as to those who become creditor during the interval while the mortgage is not on file as well as to those who have obtained judgment or levied attachment before filing.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

¶ 206. A chattel mortgage given by a corporation Sept. 2, 1904, was not filed until April 21, 1905. Held, that no creditor could object to its validity from this failure to record unless he extended credit to the corporation between said dates.—Marine Sav. Bank v. Norton, 160 Mich. 614.

¶ 207. A chattel mortgagee who delays filing his mortgage at once so that he cannot be said to have exercised, or intended to exercise, due diligence, is not in a position to raise the question of the rights of a diligent mortgagee as against those of a diligent creditor of the mortgagor.—Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627.

¶ 208. A mortgage made in good faith to secure a valid debt, given before the execution of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, but not filed until afterwards, is not void as against the assignee for want of filing, unless he represents creditors who became such while it remained unrecorded (How. St., § 6193).—Brown v. Brabb, 67 Mich. 17.

¶ 209. A chattel mortgage filed by mistake in the wrong office is nevertheless good as against creditors whose claims accrued prior to its execution, though not as against those who became such during the time between the execution of the mortgage and its filing, without knowledge of its existence.—First Nat. Bank v. Guntermann, 94 Mich. 125.

¶ 210. Where, after a creditor has agreed with a debtor to accept a renewal note for a portion of the debt, the debtor executes a chattel mortgage upon his property, which the mortgagee fails to file, and the creditor accepts the renewal note in reliance upon the non-existence of such mortgage, the date of the renewal note must be taken as the date of the transaction, so far as the relative rights of the mortgagee and the creditor are concerned.—Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627.

¶ 211. A mortgage given merely as a security for a pre-existing debt cannot, though filed at once, be allowed priority over a previous mortgage not filed so soon.—People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 212. One who becomes a creditor without notice of an unfiled mortgage on his debtor's chattels whereof possession is unchanged gets a lien superior to such mortgage by taking and duly filing—even after the other mortgage has been filed—a mortgage to secure his debt.—Dempsey v. Pforzheimer, 86 Mich. 652.

¶ 213. A mortgage not filed until after rents had accrued under a lease containing a clause reserving a lien on the chattels for rent is inferior to the lessor's rights, whether the lease had the effect of a mortgage or only that of a power.—Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257.

§ 50. Independent and paramount claims of title.

Tacking claim under mortgage to levy in hostility, see post ¶ 204.

Evidence, jury questions and instructions as to right or title under the mortgage, see post §§ 71, 72.

¶ 214. A garnishee to whom the principal defendant had turned over his stock of goods in payment of moneys advanced, was not required to account therefor; and the fact that he held a chattel mortgage on the property which was never filed, did not place him in a different position, as possession was not taken under the mortgage.—Crusoe Bros. Co. v. Kudner, 136 Mich. 583.

¶ 215. A mortgage on a stock of goods need not be filed to establish its priority over levies subsequently made, if the mortgage was given to secure the negotiable notes of a purchaser who was not the execution defendant nor a creditor of his, and did not claim in hostility to the owner of the mortgage.—Henry v. Ferguson, 55 Mich. 399.

¶ 216. The rights of a pledgee in possession are superior to the lien of a mortgage given pending such possession.—Finn v. Donahoe, 83 Mich. 165.

Mortgagee as bona fide purchaser against vendor induced to sell by mortgagor's fraud, see Sales, XI.

¶ 217. A vendor of goods is not estopped from reclaiming them out of a stock on the ground that they were procured by fraud, by reason of his having had notice, at the time of sale, of a mortgage on the stock given by the vendee to secure a pre-existing debt and covering accessions to the stock.—Vincent v. Hansen, 113 Mich. 173.

¶ 218. In an action of replevin where a lessee was to sell certain machines to his lessor, who credited on the purchase price certain past due rent, but title did not pass because of the lessor's failure to make a cash payment, held, that the lessee's mortgagee could claim possession of the machines though the lessee had not repaid the rent so credited.—Hughes v. Daniells, 87 Mich. 190.

¶ 219. In an action of trover by a chattel mortgagee against a seller who replevied the property from the mortgagor, a directed verdict for the plaintiff is justified by evidence of valuable consideration for the mortgage, of want of notice of the mortgagor's fraud in obtaining the goods, of notice of the mortgage to the defendant before action of replevin taken by him, and that no credit was extended by the defendant while the mortgage was unrecorded, the plaintiff being a bona fide mortgagee and the defendant having invested the mortgagor with indicia of ownership.—Heenan v. Forest City Paint & Varnish Co., 138 Mich. 548.

¶ 220. Where a manufacturing corporation gave notes to a bicycle corporation in relation to a bicycle contract, and it appeared that a certain number of bicycle frames were set apart as part of the consideration for which the notes were given, but passed into the possession of a trustee under a mortgage for the benefit of creditors given by the bicycle corporation, and where part of a fund on hand consisted of the amount realized from the conversion of such frames, the title of the manufacturing corporation to the frames was not divested, and it was entitled to an accounting for such frames.—World Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton-Kenwood Cycle Co., 123 Mich. 620.

¶ 221. The rights of a vendor in possession are superior to the lien of a mortgage given pending such possession to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, even though the bill of sale of the goods was procured from the purchaser by the vendor's fraud, if the latter was in possession of the property by consent of the purchaser under the agreement.—Finn v. Donahoe, 83 Mich. 165.

¶ 222. Where a vendor, with knowledge of the existence of a chattel mortgage covering the vendee's entire stock of goods, and all accessions thereto, consents that goods sold to the vendee both before and after such knowledge shall be considered as commission goods so as not to subject them to the mortgage and afterwards insists on settling with the vendee and accepts his notes for the purchase price, upon which he brings suit and attaches the vendee's stock of goods, he takes the same subject to the lien of said mortgage.—Merrill v. Denton, 73 Mich. 628.

¶ 223. Where the vendor of a stock of goods agreed with the vendee's father that if he would advance a certain sum as part payment for the goods he should be repaid by the vendee out of the first sales thereof, vendee giving her father a mortgage on the goods as security for such advance, the vendor was held to be estopped from claiming any lien for the unpaid purchase money as against the mortgagee's assignee.—Finn v. Donahoe, 87 Mich. 292, reversing on rehearing 83 Mich. 165.

¶ 224. A wife who knows that her husband is about to include some of her own property in a chattel mortgage given in part to secure payment for her own board is estopped from claiming the property as against the mortgagee if she neglects to assert her right to it at the time. But evidence that she knew it long afterwards, and when the mortgagee had taken the property, is immaterial.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 225. Complainant bank took a mortgage of a corporation on its personal property to secure a loan on Sept. 2, 1904. The mortgage was not recorded until April 21, 1905. Held, a creditor could not assert the invalidity of the mortgage from the failure to file it when it appeared that after he knew it was filed he received payments on his account and repeatedly had notes renewed to him.—Marine Sav. Bank v. Norton, 160 Mich. 614.

¶ 227. Purchasers of goods that have been mortgaged under an arrangement that the mortgage shall cover additions are estopped from disputing any such arrangement if they have bought subject to it.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 228. One is estopped from questioning the validity of a mortgage upon chattels which he has bought subject to the lien of such mortgage, he expressly assuming it and agreeing to pay it as part of the purchase price.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Lumber Co., 69 Mich. 127.

§ 54. ——By representations as to credit or ownership.

¶ 229. A bank is not estopped from asserting a chattel mortgage lien on the property of one of its debtors by the fact that, in reply to a letter from another bank inquiring as to the character and financial standing of the debtor, but containing no intimation that a loan was contemplated, it merely commended the debtor's business reputation and personal habits, and gave the amount of his assets above liabilities, without disclosing the existence of such mortgage or the indebtedness represented thereby.—First Nat. Bank v. Marshall & I. Bank, 108 Mich. 114.

¶ 230. Statements made by a mortgagor of chattels for the purpose of obtaining credit for a corporation of which he was a member, to the effect that he had sold the mortgaged property to such corporation, are not conclusive upon the mortgagee, unless he knew of them at the time, and kept silent; nor is he estopped from claiming under his mortgage merely because the property was permitted to remain in the apparent control of the corporation.—First Nat. Bank v. Marshall & I. Bank, 108 Mich. 114.

¶ 231. False representations made by a creditor holding an unrecorded chattel mortgage as to the financial standing of his debtor, in answer to a letter of inquiry from a merchant from whom the debtor is seeking to purchase goods on credit, to induce the extending of such credit, will estop the creditor from interposing a mortgage subsequently executed to him to prevent the collection of the debt contracted in reliance upon such representations; and the same rule applies to the concealment by the creditor of the debt, and of the place of residence of the debtor (his place of business not being his real place of residence), if made for the purpose of inducing such credit.—Curtis v. Wilcox, 91 Mich. 229.

¶ 232. It is an act of bad faith for a mortgagee to withhold from the files a mortgage given him by a debtor in order to shield the latter from demands that have been contracted in ignorance of its existence.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 275.

¶ 233. The withholding of a chattel mortgage from the files is a fraud upon parties extending credit to the mortgagor during the time it is withheld, and in ignorance of it, and such a mortgage is void as to creditors.—Baker v. Parkhurst, 119 Mich. 542.

¶ 234. Reservation in a chattel mortgage of a merchandise stock of a power of sale in the usual course of trade does not invalidate it as against creditors.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

¶ 235. A chattel mortgage void for fraud, is void as to all parties claiming under it without regard to bona fides or estoppel; such a mortgage is void in the hands of a trustee for creditors although he did not himself participate in the negotiations.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 236. A mortgage given to indemnify the mortgagee for becoming surety on the bond of the mortgagor as administrator of the estate of a decedent, and which authorizes the mortgagee to sell to satisfy claims proved against such estate "according to the orders of the probate court," is not rendered invalid as against creditors by the fact that such administrator, the mortgagor, was himself a creditor of the estate, if the mortgaged property has in fact been sold by the mortgagee and the proceeds paid over upon the claims proved against the estate, excluding that in favor of the administrator.—Sutherland v. Danaher, 35 Mich. 422.

Description of debt or liability, see ante § 19.
Pre-existing debt as debt secured, see post § 57.
General doctrine that want of consideration is badge of fraud on creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, C.

¶ 237. An indemnity mortgage is valid if honestly and fairly given; and if merely an indemnity to the extent of securing the mortgagor's debts more directly, and made with the express concurrence of the creditors who hold them, it is not void as against creditors.—Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135.

¶ 238. Where the mortgagee of chattels did not file his mortgage, and allowed the mortgagor to continue to appear to the world as owner of the property, and suffered it to remain precisely as though he had no incumbrance upon it, so that third parties to whom the mortgagor was indebted contracted with the mortgagor in good faith for possession of the property as security during an extension of time granted him—they to indemnify themselves thereafter out of the property if the debt was not paid, and to return the surplus—it cannot be held that the whole consideration of such a contract was the pre-existing debt alone, and that therefore the rights of the third parties are subservient to the mortgage. Whether considered as a sale or security, such a consideration, involving stipulations of great value and extending beyond the mere prior debt, was enough to impart to the transaction the good faith of subsequent purchasers and mortgagees made essential by R. S. 1846, ch. 81, to give it precedence of the mortgage. —Sheldon v. Warner, 26 Mich. 403.

¶ 239. A mortgage by a copartnership, including the individual debt of one partner as well as a firm debt is not fraudulent in law as to a subsequent mortgagee.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 504.

¶ 240. A mortgage is not void against a defrauded vendor bringing replevin because given for a sum in excess of the amount advanced at the time of its execution, the excess sum being intended to secure pre-existing indebtedness.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 241. A chattel mortgage given to secure a precedent indebtedness is valid as against one from whom the mortgaged goods had been fraudulently purchased by the mortgagor, where the mortgagee had no knowledge of the fraud, and where a part of the indebtedness was incurred after such fraudulent purchase, but upon the agreement of the debtor to give such security whenever it should be demanded.—Hees v. Carr, 115 Mich. 654.

¶ 242. Where, to secure previous debts and new advances, the vendee of goods bought on credit mortgages them to a third person without notice that the sale was procured by fraud, such mortgagee is protected as a bona fide purchaser to the full extent of his mortgage.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

Assertion of lien after discharge as fraud on other creditors, see post § 119.

¶ 243. A mortgage given by mistake for more or less than the actual indebtedness intended to be secured is not thereby invalidated where no fraud or deception was intended by either party.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

¶ 244. A chattel mortgage false in fact should not be placed on the public files to the injury of third persons.—Willison v. Deenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

§ 59. Evidence as to fraud or notice.

Giving mortgage as evidence bearing on fraud as ground for attachment, see Attachment, §§ 122-124.

Affidavit as evidence, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11903.

¶ 245. When the good faith of a mortgage is in question, the time when it was filed and the use afterwards made of it may be shown. —Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 275.

¶ 246. Plaintiffs, in an action of replevin, claimed property under a chattel mortgage, and defendants claimed to hold it under attachments against the mortgagors. The evidence tended to show that there was no manual delivery of the mortgage to plaintiffs, who lived in another state, but that the mortgagors were indebted to the plaintiffs in more than its amount. Held competent for the plaintiffs to put in evidence a letter from the mortgagors, written some time before the levy of attachments, informing them of the execution of the mortgage. The letter would tend in some degree to prove that the true intent of the mortgage was to secure an actual indebtedness, and not to make a mere cover of the transaction.—Sweetser v. Mead, 5 Mich. 107.

¶ 247. Where the question is whether the mortgage under which plaintiff claims was fraudulent as to creditors, another mortgage executed at the same time and as a part of the debtor's general plan securing creditor who was a relative of the mortgagor, and who was seeking to secure plaintiff as well as himself, is admissible as bearing upon the fraudulent intent.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226.

¶ 248. In an action for the recovery of goods fraudulently purchased from plaintiff by defendant's assignor, where it appeared that the assignor had conducted a special sale at half price of a pretended large consignment of goods from another dealer to whom a chattel mortgage was given on the day before the assignment, it was admissible to show as bearing on the validity and good faith of the chattel mortgage that only a small quantity was received from such other dealer and that the assignor had said that he did not know how much he owed the other dealer, the mortgagee.—Koch v. Lyon, 82 Mich. 513.

¶ 249. Procuring a letter from a mortgagor by which he acknowledged receipt of an "annexed bill of goods," the bill being antedated and receipt of the same being denied by him on the stand and the amount being included in the mortgage executed after the date of the bill, is a badge of fraud, where the mortgagor as seller was in position to prove the invoice and order for the goods by other means than the letter, if in fact they had been ordered, and where the letter was presented at night already prepared for signature and the mortgagor called out of bed to sign it.—Rosenthal v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 527.

fraud of the mortgagee on the other partner, it being admitted that an arrangement had been made to reduce the amount owing by a certain date, and that it had been partly reduced before that date, and that the mortgage was procured with care to prevent the defrauded partner from knowing what was afoot, it was proper to show that had the time been allowed to elapse the full reduction would have been made as agreed, he having been the managing partner who negotiated the agreement for further credit on condition that such reduction be made.—Walsh v. Taitt, 142 Mich. 127.

¶ 251. There being an issue as to whether a chattel mortgage was procured by fraud from one partner without knowledge of the other, and that the fraud comprised the inclusion in the mortgage of a debt to another not in fact owed, and that an agency existing for such other was caused to be broken and taken up by the mortgagee, it was proper as bearing thereon to receive letters bearing on the account with such other and explaining the transaction.—Walsh v. Taitt, 142 Mich. 127.

¶ 252. On the question of fraud in procuring a chattel mortgage from one's partner, it is proper to show that it was so drawn as to include a sum for a pretended debt to another creditor than the mortgagee, and that such debt had no existence in fact, that the mortgagee had knowledge of such fact and designed to cause a termination of a contract of agency of the firm for such other creditor and to drive the firm out of business; where defendant partner had no knowledge of the making of the mortgage and the other partner had received a sum for executing it.—Walsh v. Taitt, 142 Mich. 127.

¶ 253. A fraud upon unsecured creditors is not shown by evidence of a mortgage given to certain creditors of a corporation covering practically the entire property of the corporation debtor where the credit thus secured was extended in the belief that the corporation was solvent, there is no evidence of want of good faith, and the indebtedness secured is about equivalent to the property mortgaged.—Franklin Needle Co. v. Amazon Hosiery Co., 128 Mich. 198.

¶ 254. The fact that stockholders, to whom a chattel mortgage of corporation property was given to secure a debt due them, the day before the mortgage was given, paid the balance due on their stock subscription by crediting the amount on their claims, does not as a matter of law establish that there was fraud in the execution of the mortgage.—Crossette v. Jordan, 132 Mich. 78.

¶ 255. To show notice of the plaintiff's rights in a suit by a mortgagee to recover for logs sold by a mill owner, to whom they had been delivered for the purpose of manufacture by the mortgagor, who had mortgaged them prior to such sale, plaintiff may show the relations existing between the mill owner and his vendee, and to that end that the vendee held a mortgage on the mill property, defendant being a purchaser from such vendee.—Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12.

¶ 256. A finding of notice of a chattel mortgage on lumber turned over to the claimant in payment of a debt cannot be sustained on evidence showing without contradiction that his first knowledge of the mortgage (an invalidly filed one) was first acquired after title had passed to him, and that he had no notice before then, and where moreover little if any of the property was covered by the mortgage.—Cass v. Gunnison, 68 Mich. 147.

¶ 257. Where a stock of goods owned by F. was by him placed in, and was used as a part of, a business carried on by his daughter, she making large additions thereto, and where the goods were with F.'s knowledge used as a basis of credit by her, and the manager in charge wrote stating that she was owner, it was sufficient to show want of notice to her mortgagees as against testimony by a clerk of a conversation evincive of notice had in the presence of such manager.—Rogers v. Robinson, 104 Mich. 329.

§ 60. Jury questions and instructions.

See also ante ¶ 151.

As to good faith of one taking after failure to renew, see also post ¶ 384.

¶ 258. The erasure in a mortgage of a printed clause to the effect that the mortgaged goods were "free and clear from all encumbrance, liens," etc., was proper to go to the jury upon the question whether the mortgagee had actual notice of a prior mortgage subsequently filed.—Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 634.

¶ 259. In replevin where the question of fraudulent conspiracy between the purchaser of goods and mortgagees was involved, an instruction which in substance told the jury that the evidence on the question of keeping a first chattel mortgage off the records must be such as to satisfy the judgment of the jury that there was fraud, was too favorable to the defendants instead of being subject to objection by them.—Durrell v. Richardson, 119 Mich. 502.

¶ 260. In replevin of goods claimed to have been fraudulently purchased, against the purchaser and mortgagees who were his relatives, the facts of the withholding of a first mortgage from record, the close relationship of the parties, and that the mortgagees knew that the stock was purchased on credit and that the giving of the mortgage would give them priority over those who had recently sold the goods, and especially in view of contradictory testimony in another proceeding as to the manner of payment of the money, held that the court was justified in submitting to the jury the question whether there was any bona fide loan, or any loan at all.—Durrell v. Richardson, 119 Mich. 592.

¶ 261. Where heavy merchandise, like pig iron or lumber, is mortgaged and the mortgage is not placed on file, and there is no actual delivery and apparent change of possession, there must be a sufficiently clear and unequivocal designation of the property to serve as notice of the mortgage to creditors or subsequent purchasers; and it is for the jury to decide under proper instructions what is sufficient notice thereof.—Anderson v. Brenneman, 44 Mich. 198; Smith v. Greenop, 60 Mich. 61.

¶ 262. It was error to refuse to instruct the jury in trover for the possession of property under a chattel mortgage, where plaintiff's theory that defendant is fraudulently laying claim thereto is supported by evidence, that unless the alleged sale by the mortgagor to the defendant of such chattels was accompanied by an immediate delivery, and was followed by the actual and continued change of possession, such sale was presumptively fraudulent and void as against plaintiff, and is conclusive evidence of fraud, unless it be made to appear on the part of the defendant that the sale was made in good faith, and without any intention to defraud such mortgagor's creditors.—Wright v. Starks, 77 Mich. 221.

II. RIGHTS UNDER THE MORTGAGE; TITLE, POSSESSION AND TRANSFER OF THE PROPERTY.

A. RIGHTS GIVEN BY THE MORTGAGE; TITLE AND POSSESSION.

§ 61. In general; effect on title.

Property included in the description, see ante §§ 12, 15-17.

Mortgagee claiming under other superior title, see also ante § 50.

Mortgages taking possession under right other than the mortgage, see also post § 291.

Right to sell the goods, see post II, B.

Rights and equities of assignee of the mortgage, see post IV.

Right to insure property, see post § 63.

Right to redeem, see post § 112 et seq.

Right to buy in on own foreclosure, see post § 131.

Rights in proceeds of foreclosure sale, see post § 134.

Right to accounting of proceeds or price of property, see post § 120.

Default and right to foreclose or sell, see post VII.

Right to sue on choses in action covered by mortgage, see post § 142.

Execution of mortgage as disposal of property constituting ground for attachment, see Attachment, § 9, ¶ 21.

Attachability of chattel mortgage interests, either of mortgagor or mortgagee, see Attachment, § 15.

Rights of trustee in bankruptcy of mortgagor, see Bankruptcy, § 3.

Chattel mortgagee as bona fide purchaser of chattels, see Sales, XI.

¶ 263. It is now settled that an unforeclosed chattel mortgage is a mere security for the debt, not a transfer of title.—Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443; Kohl v. Lynn, 34 Mich. 360; People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28; Gardner v. Matteson, 38 Mich. 200; Grove v. Wise, 39 Mich. 161; Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602; Brink v. Freoff, 40 Mich. 610; Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307; Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 264. The earlier doctrine was that a chattel mortgage passes to the mortgagee the legal title on condition, upon breach whereof the title becomes absolute at law.—Tunnahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Thurber v. Jewett, 3 Mich. 295; and see Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305; Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443.

¶ 265. Title does not become absolute in mortgagee until foreclosure or some equivalent act.—Kohl v. Lynn, 34 Mich. 360; Brink v. Freoff, 40 Mich. 610; Grove v. Wise, 39 Mich. 161; Cary v. Hewitt, 26 Mich. 228.

¶ 266. The relations of the parties to a chattel mortgage is that of debtor and creditor with the latter secured by lien, and the title of the mortgagee does not become absolute until after foreclosure and sale.—Hannah & Hogg v. Richter Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 220.

¶ 267. The common law doctrine that a chattel mortgage is an instrument of sale conveying the title to the property does not prevail in this state.—Hannah & Hogg v. Richter Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 220.

¶ 268. A chattel mortgagee is not the absolute owner of the property; he is bound to apply and account for it, and has no greater interest than the amount of his security.—International Wrecking & Transp. Co. v. McMorran, 73 Mich. 467.

¶ 269. Whether the mortgagor or mortgagee has possession, the property right of the former is only the residue after payment of the mortgage.—Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

§ 62. Conditions and collateral agreements.

Insurance conditions, see post § 63.

Effect of collateral understanding as to ownership where mortgage is not filed, see ante ¶ 147.

Subsequent agreement authorizing immediate possession for mortgagee, see also post ¶ 322.

Default and right to foreclose, see post § 121.

Power of sale as limited by collateral agreement, see post § 127.

Effect of agreement between the parties as to possession on mortgagee's right of action against third persons for interference with the goods, see post § 143.

¶ 270. An agreement that security given for a present loan shall also be held by the lender as security for any balance due him on previous transactions is not equivalent to an agreement that, if a balance is found to be due the borrower on such transactions, the same shall be applied in reduction of the present loan.—Pinch v. Willard, 108 Mich. 204.

¶ 271. A trust chattel mortgage contained a condition that it should not be binding unless the beneficiaries should extend the time of payment for 40 days upon the obligations which the mortgage was designed to secure. Another clause authorized the trustee, should he consider the indebtedness insecure, to take possession of the property, and to sell the same as he might deem best for all persons interested. Held, that the assent of the beneficiaries to the act of the trustee in taking possession of the property before the expiration of the 40 days was not inconsistent with their previous acceptance of the condition on which the mortgage was given; the two clauses were both to be given effect.—Beckman v. Noble, 115 Mich. 523.

¶ 272. The term "appear," as used in the condition to a chattel mortgage executed by a respondent in a criminal case to secure the mortgagees for becoming sureties for his appearance at a certain term of court to answer an information on file against him, and conditioned that, if the mortgagor shall "appear" at the next jury term of said court, then the mortgage shall be void, must be construed with reference to the obligation which the sureties have undertaken, and the mortgagor's appearance at the term named when a continuance was taken will not avoid the mortgage, so far as notice to subsequent purchasers is concerned.—Crawford v. Vinton, 102 Mich. 83.

¶ 273. In trover against the mortgagee of chattels neither the mortgagor nor any one in his shoes can complain of a ruling that unless sale was made with the mortgagee's consent there was no waiver of the condition that certain sales would cause a forfeiture.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

§ 63. Provisions as to insurance or protection of property.

Failure to insure as ground for taking possession, see post ¶ 290.

Breach of insurance and protection covenant as ground to foreclose, see post § 121.

¶ 274. A mortgagee of chattels may insure them himself if the mortgagor does not keep his covenant to do so, and he may add any reasonable premium to the amount due him.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 275. In case of a stipulation for insurance of the mortgaged property for the mortgagee's benefit in a sum equal to the full amount due on the mortgage, "due" was construed to mean "owing," and held to contemplate insurance to the extent of the amount left unpaid.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215.

¶ 276. A stipulation for insurance of the mortgaged property for the mortgagee's benefit, mortgagor being in possession, is not discharged by the mortgagee's procuring the insurance after the mortgagor's default.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215.

§ 64. Right of possession in general.

Primary right of mortgagor, and right of mortgagee on default or because of insecurity, see post §§ 65-69.

Retention of possession as object of statute requiring filing, see ante ¶ 133.

Right of subsequent purchaser from mortgagor, see post § 73.

Liability for negligence in caring for property, see post § 70.

Remedies of mortgagee for injuries to the property or possession thereof by third persons, see post §§ 143, 144.

Right to custody of chattels when attached, see Attachment, § 60.

Right under mortgage to sue as against levy made against property in possession of mortgagee, see also Conversion, II.

Seizure under chattel mortgage as exonerating carrier from duty to deliver goods, see Carriers, ¶ 101.

¶ 277. Any parol undertaking between the mortgagors and mortgagees of property regarding its possession is ended when the property is converted by a third person.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

§ 65. ——By Mortgagor.

Filing as substitute for possession by mortgagee, see ante § 32.

Reservation of right as fraud on creditors, see ante § 55.

Right of mortgagee to take possession, see post §§ 67-69.
Right to restoration of possession upon tender of payment, see post § 118.

¶ 279. The mortgagor of chattels has the right of possession until demand is made for them, and must keep them safely until then.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 280. The mortgagor, while remaining in possession, holds, not as the mortgagee's agent, but as the owner of incumbered property.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 281. A provision in a chattel mortgage allowing the mortgagor to retain possession until the debt is due is for his benefit, and may be waived by him at any time.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

¶ 282. The waiver by a mortgagor of his right to the possession of the property until the maturity of the mortgage debt, and his consent that the mortgagee may take immediate possession, cannot affect the rights of an attaching creditor, who, if he regards the mortgage as valid, should levy subject to the rights of the mortgagee; and if he claims it void as to creditors and succeeds in showing such fact, the agreement as to possession will not affect that question.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

§ 66. ——Under authority to manage or sell.
Notice from possession by mortgagor as agent for mortgagee, see ante § 42.
Right of mortgagor to sue on an account covered by the mortgage, see post § 142.

¶ 283. The right sometimes reserved to the mortgagor of chattels to retain possession and dispose of them in the course of trade is a conditional bailment, which will be terminated by any change or enlargement of the reserved privilege without the mortgagee's consent, or by any diversion of the proceeds of sale from the designated object. The right is not assignable or independent.—Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 284. Authority from the mortgagee to the mortgagor to go on and make sales of the mortgaged goods in the usual course of business would be ended by the levy of an attachment on them.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 285. A sale of mortgaged goods to pay an existing debt is not in the ordinary course of business, and would violate the rights of the mortgagee, even in case sales in the usual course were contemplated as permissible.—Laing v. Perrott, 48 Mich. 298.

Rights of assignee of mortgage, see post IV.
Possession of mortgagee as notice to third persons, see ante § 40.
Taking possession as waiver of lien, see post § 85.
First and second mortgagees in possession as tenants in common, see post ¶ 358.
Effect of tender upon mortgagee's right to retain possession, see post § 108.
Duty to restore possession on redemption or discharge, see post § 118.
Seizure by mortgagee after extinguishment of debt by merger, see also post ¶ 415.
Foreclosure upon default, see post § 121.
Purchasers on defective foreclosure as mortgagees in possession, see post § 135.
Necessity of redemption to divest possession acquired by irregular sale, see also post § 139, ¶ 523.
Mortgagee's right of action before condition broken for interference with possession, see post § 144.

¶ 286. The right of a mortgagee of chattels to take them into his own possession is part of his security, and a contract right; and nothing afterwards done by or against the mortgagor can affect it.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560.

¶ 287. The mortgagee is entitled to immediate possession, to hold until condition performed, unless the parties otherwise stipulate.—Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 288. Possession by mortgagees of chattels is favored by statute.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602; Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 289. Under a mortgage giving the mortgagee a right to take possession there is a corresponding duty in the mortgagor to deliver it, and this necessarily involves the duty of identifying it.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 290. A chattel mortgagee cannot take possession for failure of the mortgagor to assign an insurance policy due to the wrongful taking of the policy by an agent of the mortgagee.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 291. Where the owner of demised premises also held a chattel mortgage on the tenant's property, both the lease and chattel mortgage providing for the taking of possession in case of default, the tenant has no right of action for an unlawful seizure of the mortgaged property where, upon both the rent and debt being in arrears, the landlord, being lawfully upon the premises, took possession of the mortgaged property, and bolted the door of the premises, for the purpose of taking an inventory.—Laetz v. Tierny, 153 Mich. 279.

¶ 292. Under a mortgage covering all the lumber and other chattels in a lumber yard, and authorizing the mortgagee, on default, to enter upon the premises and take possession, and to sell the goods, the mortgagee has a right to take possession of the yard and to sell the lumber where it stands, but not to exclude the mortgagor from the yard or office, or to hold the yard after the sale.—Bearss v. Preston, 66 Mich. 11.

¶ 293. A mortgagee's right of possession becomes absolute upon default, and remains so until all of the debt is realized from the property; and if possession is prematurely taken it may be retained, subject to the mortgagor's right of redemption on payment of so much as is not realized, or possibly of reclamation until default.—Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 294. Seizure under an execution cannot aid a premature seizure under a mortgage if the execution is not against the mortgagor but against a stranger.—Botsford v. Murphy, 47 Mich. 536.

§ 69. ——Insecurity clause and attempted transfer.

Construction of insecurity clause, see also ante § 62.
Title by independent purchase after waiver of insecurity clause, see post ¶ 328.
Return of goods on tender of payment by mortgagor, see post § 118.
Right of foreclosure under insecurity clause, see post § 121.
Power of sale under insecurity clause before maturity of debt, see post § 128.
Right of action to gain possession under insecurity clause, see post § 144.

¶ 295. Where a mortgage provides that the mortgagees may take possession of the mortgaged property whenever they consider their claim in jeopardy, they are entitled to possession even though the conditions of the mortgage have not been broken.—McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

¶ 296. Under a clause allowing the mortgagee to take possession when he deems himself insecure it is not necessary that he be in fact insecure; it is enough if he had reason to believe and in good faith did believe himself to be insecure.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 93 Mich. 143.

¶ 297. The right of a chattel mortgagee to take possession under an insecurity clause in the instrument is not a mere option to be exercised arbitrarily without reference to changed conditions or to the mortgagor's conduct.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 93 Mich. 143.

¶ 298. A mortgagee may reserve the right to take possession of the goods if sold, but the right is optional, and the mortgagor is not in fault for not delivering them if they are not demanded.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 299. Where a chattel mortgage gave the mortgagee a right of possession in case of any actual or attempted sale, assignment, disposal or removal of the whole or any part of the property, a sale of a portion in payment of an existing debt is such a violation of the condition as authorizes the mortgagee to seize the goods.—Laing v. Perrott, 48 Mich. 298.

¶ 300. Under a clause empowering the mortgagee to take possession whenever he should deem himself insecure, he would have good cause for doing so if he had reason to think and did think that he had been overreached in regard to the value of the property.—Botsford v. Murphy, 47 Mich. 536.

¶ 301. Where a stock of mortgaged goods has been seized under a writ of attachment so that the mortgagor is prevented from carrying on his business in the customary manner, mortgagees may consider their claim in jeopardy, and proceed under the terms of the mortgage to take possession.—McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

¶ 302. A clause in a mortgage providing that if the mortgagor should sell, assign or dispose of the property, or attempt to do so, or to remove the same from the township, without the written assent of the mortgagee, the latter might enter upon the premises of the mortgagor, or any other place where the property might be, and take possession of, and sell and dispose of, the same, is neither an express nor an implied covenant for possession by the mortgagor, so as to subject the property to levy and sale on execution against him.—Eggleston v. Mundy, 4 Mich. 295.

¶ 303. Where a chattel mortgage contains a clause authorizing the mortgagees to take possession whenever they deem themselves insecure, an attachment in opposition to the mortgage, and the officer's refusal to admit the mortgagees to joint posession, justify them in demanding possession, whether the debt is due or not.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

¶ 304. A chattel mortgage provided that the mortgagee might take possession in case the property was sold. Held, that a demand of payment before the debt was due was not a demand for the goods, especially if made by the assignor of the debt from the vendor of the goods, since both had parted with their interests.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 305. In replevin to enforce a chattel mortgage an instruction that the mortgagee was justified in taking possession under the general security clause of the mortgage is properly refused where the question of good faith is raised by testimony that the security was adequate.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

Right of action for proceeds of sale by mortgagor, see post § 75.

Appropriation of goods to own use as satisfaction pro tanto, see post ¶ 404.

Retention of possession after tender by mortgagor, see post § 108.

Holding after discharge of mortgage, see post VI.

Of goods remaining in mortgagee's possession after satisfaction of debt, see post § 118.

Irregularities at foreclosure sale, see post § 138.

Mode of sale amounting to conversion, see post §§ 130, 137-139.

Conversion by excessive sale, see post §§ 132, 133.

Conversion by third persons, see post §§ 143, 144.

Evidence to show conversion of mortgaged goods by party in possession, see also Conversion, II.

Measure of damages for injury to mortgaged goods, see Damages, III, B.

¶ 306. If the mortgagee takes possession prematurely he does not thereby become liable for the price as for conversion of the whole, nor will he be answerable for the value of the whole property until he has disposed of it. And even in case of conversion he will be responsible for the balance only after his own debt is paid.—Daggett, Bassett & Hills Co. v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 307. It is a conversion for a mortgagee, after taking possession of a portion of the mortgaged property on breach of condition, to retain possession of it and assign the mortgage to a third person; if he so converts the property its value may be applied on the debt.—Brong v. Brown, 42 Mich. 119.

¶ 308. Where a mortgagor is entitled to the possession of the goods until condition broken subject to the mortgagee's right to take possession under an insecurity clause, he can maintain trover if the mortgagee arbitrarily enforces said clause.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 93 Mich. 143.

¶ 309. As between a mortgagee of chattels and a second mortgagee, whose mortgage was executed after possession of the property had been surrendered to the former, a sale of the property upon the first mortgage does not constitute such a conversion as to make the first mortgagee liable in trover.—Grimes v. Rose, 24 Mich. 416.

¶ 310. Trover will not lie against a mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property under claim of absolute ownership without tender of the amount due him.—Card v. Fowler, 120 Mich. 646.

¶ 311. There is no conversion where a mortgagee, under a danger clause in mortgage, takes possession of the goods which are less in value than the amount of the mortgage.—Botsford v. Murphy, 47 Mich. 536.

¶ 312. If, when the mortgagee of a crop of celery has taken possession under his mortgage and placed men in charge, the mortgagor sends the men away after the trenches are opened to give the celery air, and then neglects to take proper care of the crop, he cannot recover against the mortgagee for resultant damage.—Van Werden v. Winslow, 117 Mich. 564.

¶ 313. Property which is taken out from the operation of a chattel mortgage by the mortgagor's fraudulent contrivance is wrongfully converted.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 280.

¶ 314. As against sureties on a replevin bond who took a mortgage on the chattels to indemnify them, which mortgaged chattels were left with the mortgagor, and the mortgage never became available to the mortgagees the mortgagor has no equity growing out of the giving of the mortgage to protect him against a suit for suffering a collusive judgment in the replevin action.—Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525.

See also post ¶ 412.

¶ 315. Where chattels have been mortgaged to secure the payment of promissory notes, the notes must be put in evidence in defense to an action of replevin for the chattels in order to establish the mortgagee's right of possession as against that of a person otherwise entitled to it. But as against a person wrongfully trying to obtain possession of them, the prior possession of the mortgagee would be enough.—Hendrie v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 49 Mich. 401.

¶ 316. In trover by a mortgagee against an officer and a judgment creditor of the mortgagor to recover the value of the mortgaged goods taken from the mortgagor's possession, evidence is admissible showing an arrangement between the mortgagor and mortgagee whereby the latter was entitled to the immediate possession of the goods, and had the right to hold the same until the mortgage was due and paid.—Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488; Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 317. In an action of trover by a chattel mortgagee against one who has replevied the property, it is competent to introduce the draft which furnished the consideration for the chattel mortgage.—Heenan v. Forest City Paint & Varnish Co., 138 Mich. 548.

¶ 318. A mortgagee of chattels must prove the amount and condition of his claim if a controversy as to his rights under the mortgage arises with any one interested in questioning it.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 319. In an action by mortgagees against a marshal for interference with their possession while disposing of the goods, it is proper to show that they were realizing the best prices that could be obtained and failed to get enough to pay the mortgages, and that the deficiency exceeded the value of the goods taken by the marshal.—Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 320. Where a married woman brings trover for chattels taken upon a mortgage against a grantee thereof, and there is conflicting testimony as to whether the grantee held them under an agreement with the husband or one with the wife, and, if with the wife, whether it was absolute or conditional, the case is for the jury.—Stansell v. Leavitt, 48 Mich. 225.

¶ 321. A firm of lumbermen let a logging contract and agreed to furnish the logger with teams, the title to which the firm was to retain until the teams were paid for. The logger mortgaged the teams and never completed his contract; and the survivor of the firm having taken possession of the teams, the mortgagee replevied them from him. Held, that evidence bearing on the state of the account between the contracting parties at the time the mortgage was given was properly admitted, as it tended to show that nothing was then owing for the teams.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

§ 72. Instructions and jury questions as to title or right.

¶ 322. Where a mortgagee replevies attached chattels under a mortgage authorizing him to take possession after thirty days' default, evidence of an arrangement made prior to the levy of the attachment, between the mortgagor and mortgagee, by which the latter was to have immediate possession, should not be ignored by charging that plaintiff cannot recover unless some of the debt secured became due thirty days before the suit.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

¶ 323. Where a chattel mortgage expressly provides that the mortgagor is to keep a stock of goods replenished to an amount equal to 175% of the debt, it is improper to allow the jury to find that such was not the agreement of the parties, but that the right to take possession depended upon the mortgagee's belief as to the adequacy of the security.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

Criminal disposal of mortgaged chattels, see Crimes, II; Indictment.

¶ 324. The mortgagor has the right to make a general sale of whatever interest he owns.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 325. A right of action on the part of the mortgagors for fraud in connection with the making of the chattel mortgage in question, did not pass to the purchaser from them.—Soule v. Harrington, 135 Mich. 155.

¶ 326. A chattel mortgagee cannot be deprived of possession by subsequent purchasers without tender or payment.—Paulus v. Nunn, 48 Mich. 190.

¶ 327. Purchasers subject to the equities of a chattel mortgagee in possession cannot divest such possession without redemption even if foreclosure has not been regular.—De Graff v. Byles, 63 Mich. 25.

¶ 328. The seller of a horse, who took a chattel mortgage thereon from the purchaser, does not have a legal title as against a purchaser from the mortgagor merely by force of a provision in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagor shall retain possession and in case of default in payments the mortgagee shall have the right to take the property wherever it may be found without process of law, where the mortgagee after default did not exercise or seek to exercise rights based on such provision, but bought in at execution sale after the sale by the mortgagor had been made.—Allison v. Teeters, 176 Mich. 216.

¶ 329. Every purchaser of mortgaged goods becomes in equity a trustee of any fund provided for in the mortgage to the same extent to which it makes the mortgagor himself such a trustee.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 330. A chattel mortgage was executed upon a quantity of logs to secure the payment of accommodation notes given by the mortgagees to enable the mortgagors to cut the logs and manufacture them into lumber, under an agreement on the part of the mortgagors to pay the notes out of the proceeds arising from the sale by them of said lumber. Held, that purchasers of the lumber could hold it as against the mortgagees, or the holders of the notes, who claimed to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees.—First Nat. Bank v. Weed, 89 Mich. 357.

¶ 331. One who purchases property expressly subject to a chattel mortgage which he assumes cannot assert any invalidity in the inception of such mortgage.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Co., 69 Mich. 127.

¶ 332. A purchaser of mortgaged property has the right before sale to test the existence of the lien by a bill to restrain foreclosure, so that in case of an adverse decision he can have a chance to pay the amount due and save the property.—Daugherty v. Byles, 41 Mich. 61.

§ 74. Consent of mortgagee.

Waiver of clause for forfeiture by sale, see also ante ¶ 273.

Reserved right to possession and sale, see ante § 66.

As passing unincumbered title, see also ante ¶ 330.

Authority to pledge, see post § 78.

Neglect of mortgagee to assert lien as bar to right of foreclosure, see post § 124.

¶ 333. Where a chattel mortgage authorizes the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property in case of its sale by the mortgagor without the written assent of the mortgagee, and such assent is afterwards given on condition that the money realized shall be applied to the payment of the mortgage debt, on a breach of such condition, a right inures to the mortgagee to take possession of the property.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 334. Where a mortgagee claims the possession of a part of the mortgaged property because of an alleged attempt of the mortgagor to dispose of it contrary to the condition of the mortgage, and in a suit brought by the mortgagor for its recovery it appears that the mortgagee assented to the sale by the mortgagor of the balance of the property, it is error for the court to instruct the jury, generally, that such consent was a waiver of said condition, without calling attention to the claim of the mortgagee as to the alleged attempt of the mortgagor to dispose of the particular property in suit.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497.

§ 75. Rights to price or proceeds of sale.

Right upon breach of condition to apply proceeds of sale to mortgage debt, see ante ¶ 333.

Extinction of reserved power of sale by improper sale or misapplication of proceeds or hostile levy, see ante § 66.

Accounting for sale price, see post § 120.

¶ 335. A mortgagee whose mortgage provides that any sales of the property shall be in the name of the mortgagee, and that the lien shall follow the property, may recover the purchase price of the chattels, under the common counts in assumpsit, of one who buys them from the mortgagor.—Flood v. Butzbach, 114 Mich. 613.

¶ 336. The common counts in assumpsit lie in favor of a mortgagee for the purchase price of the mortgaged chattels against one who buys them from the mortgagor, where the mortgage provides that any sale shall be in the mortgagee's name and that the lien shall follow the goods.—Flood v. Butzbach, 114 Mich. 613.

¶ 337. Where a mortgage of all the stock in trade "now or hereafter" to be owned by the mortgagor authorizes the mortgagees in case of default to take possession of the stock and to collect and receive moneys on the accounts, the mortgagees, if they have not waived their right of lien, are entitled to hold, as against a garnishing creditor who had full notice of the mortgage, money due the mortgagor from the garnishee on account of stock acquired and sold after the execution of the mortgage.—Fuller v. Rhodes, 78 Mich. 36.

§ 76. Rights of takers under mortgagee.

See also ante ¶ 329.

Demand for possession on mortgagor after sale, see also ante ¶ 304.

¶ 338. A sale and delivery of mortgaged chattels by the mortgagee when in lawful possession by virtue of a voluntary surrender by the mortgagors, would transfer all his rights as mortgagee, and this would entitle his vendee to take and retain possession as against the mortgagors, at least until the mortgage debt was paid or tendered.—Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443.

¶ 339. A bank took a bill of sale of certain property as security but there was no change of possession and it was not recorded and hence, under Comp. L. 1897. § 9523, was void as against creditors. The bank sold the goods included in the bill of sale. Held, that the last purchaser took no better title than the bank had as against creditors of the first owner.—Sachs v. Norn, 139 Mich. 357.

¶ 340. A sheriff or execution purchaser can obtain no title against a mortgagee of chattels without paying the amount due or performing the conditions, and being responsible for any unlawful interference.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530.

¶ 341. A mortgagee's interest in chattels cannot be disturbed by an execution creditor unless the latter pays the mortgage or tenders payment, which he can do at any time before sale.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 342. A mortgagee may maintain trover against a sheriff who, having taken the mortgaged chattels on attachment or execution against the mortgagor, sells them in parcels; such a sale is an unlawful conversion.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488.

¶ 343. The possession of a mortgagee of chattels cannot ordinarily be disturbed by garnishment process for the sake of reaching a surplus after the lien is satisfied; and the receiver provided for by How. St., § 8065, can, at most, exercise no greater power over such chattels than a sheriff could in levying execution.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560.

¶ 344. The seizure and sale of personal property, which is about to be sold under a mortgage, an invalid renewal of which was filed, by an attaching creditor, constitutes an unlawful conversion of the property where the attaching creditor had both constructive and actual notice of the rights of the mortgagee before levying its attachment.—Kratzmer v. Detroit Lumber Co., 195 Mich. 570.

§ 78. Submortgage or pledge.

¶ 345. That a mortgagee of live-stock, for his own protection, furnished feed for such stock while in the mortgagor's possession, does not justify an inference that the mortgagor was authorized to pledge the stock for its keeping.—Cleveland v. Koch, 108 Mich. 514.

III. LIEN AND PRIORITIES.

§ 79. In general; other levy or lien.

[Note. The effect and validity of the mortgage, rather than its priority, depends on its having been filed before other rights attached or on notice which is the equivalent of such filing. The necessity and effect of such filing and sufficiency of the filing or notice are treated ante I, C, D. It is assumed for the purpose of discussing lien and priority that the mortgage must have some validity.]

¶ 346. A clerk or agent whose wages are measured by profits has no lien on property in his possession as against a chattel mortgage given by his employer, but if he were a partner he would have a lien.—Wilcox v. Matthews, 44 Mich. 192.

¶ 347. A lien for the keep of a horse is subject to that of a valid, prior chattel mortgage, and the mortgagee need not tender the amount thereof to entitle him to possession. —Reynolds v. Case, 60 Mich. 76.

¶ 348. Where a chattel mortgage secures future liabilities and the mortgaged property is attached, the creditor increases his demands at his peril, for the attachment is of the mortgagor's interest as it then stands, and he cannot diminish that interest to the attaching creditor's detriment.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 349. The relative rights of a mortgagee and of other creditors of the mortgagor represented by his assignee some of whom gave or extended credit while the mortgage was withheld from the files, are to be worked out by dividing the creditors into classes, those prior and those junior to the mortgage, and treating the mortgage as an intermediate lien for what remains of the proceeds of the mortgaged property after satisfying the prior ones, then pro rating the mortgagee with the general creditors for the unpaid balance of his debt.—Kennedy v. Dawson, 90 Mich. 79.

Mortgage with after-acquired clause as against seller of goods, see also ante § 43.
Inferiority of seller taking goods back for price after mortgage on them, see ante ¶ 184.

¶ 350. A sale and taking back of a chattel mortgage constitute one transaction so as to take priority over an earlier chattel mortgage of all personal property and all property to be acquired.—Hammel v. First Nat. Bank of Hancock, 129 Mich. 176.

§ 81. Priorities by notice or filing.

Effect of the mortgage as depending on filing or priority in filing, see ante I, D.
Effect of actual knowledge of unfiled mortgage upon priority, see ante §§ 37, 38.

Ratification of act of attorney in accepting and filing mortgage as giving priority by relation to date of filing, see Attorneys, § 82.

¶ 351. A filed chattel mortgage is valid against a subsequent judgment, based on credit subsequently extended.—Eales v. Francis, 115 Mich. 636.

¶ 352. A chattel mortgage given in good faith to secure a valid indebtedness and duly recorded, takes priority over liens for labor performed after the giving and recording of such mortgage.—Presque Isle Sash & Door Co. v. Reichel, 179 Mich. 466.

§ 82. Between unfiled mortgages.

¶ 353. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9523, which provides that chattel mortgages not filed nor accompanied by immediate change of possession, shall be absolutely void as against subsequent mortgagees in good faith, an unfiled mortgage of a growing crop taken in good faith and without notice, has priority over a previous mortgage contained in an unfiled lease of the land on which the crop is grown. —Lingle v. Owosso Sugar Co., 139 Mich. 203.

§ 83. Priority by agreement or terms of the mortgage.

Reference to prior mortgage as establishing priority without filing, see ante § 38.

¶ 354. A second chattel mortgage expressly subject to the first mortgage between the parties and also to a lease by the mortgagor on file is inferior to the lessor's right to look to the chattels for security of his accrued rents, regardless of whether the clause in the lease suffices as a chattel mortgage or merely suffices as a power in the lessor.—Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257.

§ 84. ——Rights of subsequent creditors.

¶ 355. Subsequent creditors have not, merely by virtue of the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 9523, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, No. 332, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11407, providing that every chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by actual and continued change of possession of the chattels shall "be absolutely void as against creditors of the mortgagor * * * in good faith," unless a copy thereof be filed as directed by law, an actual lien upon the mortgaged property, but the mere right to a lien, requiring a proceeding of some kind for its fastening, when they become creditors during the period between the time of the making and the filing of the mortgage.—In re Huxoll, 193 Fed. 851; Detroit Trust Co. v. Pontiac Savings Bank, 196 Fed. 29, affirmed in 237 U. S. 186, 59 L. ed. 907, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509.

§ 85. Waiver and estoppel of priority.

Waiver and estoppel between parties, see ante § 10.

Waiver and estoppel as to validity or existence of mortgage, see ante §§ 52-54.

Necessity of waiver by first mortgagee to give second mortgagee right of action against third persons for tort, see post § 143.

Joint right of action for torts by lienors waiving priority, see post § 145.

Purchase under levy or recognition of it as working estoppel to question execution or levy or sale thereunder, see Executions, XI.

Estoppel to assert satisfaction of prior judgment, see Judgments, XI.

¶ 357. A mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property under claim of absolute ownership does not thereby waive his mortgage lien.—Card v. Fowler, 120 Mich. 646.

¶ 358. A first mortgagee can waive his priority and let the second in upon the same footing with himself, so that in taking possession on default they become tenants in common of the securities and the goods therein specified.—Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 359. A creditor does not lose the right to avail himself of How. St., § 6193, making a chattel mortgage, unaccompanied by change of possession, invalid as against a creditor whose claim accrues between the execution of the mortgage and the filing thereof, by taking a chattel mortgage to secure his own claim under circumstances not entitling him to protection as a subsequent good-faith incumbrancer; nor is such right affected by his failure either to take possession by virtue of his mortgage, or to have the same properly filed.—Vining v. Millar, 116 Mich. 144.

Place and time for filing, see ante §§ 30, 81.

¶ 360. Where goods in another state are mortgaged in that state, the mortgage being duly filed there, and are subsequently brought into this state by the mortgagor without the mortgagee's knowledge or consent, an attachment here in favor of the mortgagor's creditors prevails over such mortgage.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 361. Where a citizen of Michigan deals with personal property and its apparent owner in this state, in an action against him to recover the property by one having a recorded chattel mortgage thereon in another state his rights are not affected by the existence and record thereof.—Allison v. Teeters, 176 Mich. 216.

¶ 362. Where property on which a chattel mortgage exists in Indiana is brought to Michigan and sold by the mortgagor, in an action by the mortgagee against the purchaser to recover the property the rights of such purchaser are not affected by a decree of the Indiana court rendered prior to the sale foreclosing the mortgage and authorizing a sale, when the possession of the property by the mortgagor was not disturbed by the mortgagee though there was default in payments under the mortgage and it provides that in case of default the mortgagee may take possession of the property wherever found without process of law and it shall become his absolute property.—Allison v. Teeters, 176 Mich. 216.

IV. ASSIGNMENT OR TRANSFER OF THE MORTGAGE.

§ 87. Assignability and rights of assignee.

Sale or transfer of the mortgaged property, see ante II, B.
Mortgagability of the mortgage itself, see ante ¶ 45.
Sale of property by mortgagee in possession as working assignment of his rights, see also ante § 70.
Assignment or release, effect of particular writing, see post ¶ 418.
Amount required to redeem from assignee, see post § 115.
Assignment of mortgage to subrogee upon redemption, see post § 117.
Assignee's right of foreclosure, see post § 123.
Right of mortgagee as assignor to recover from attaching officer, see post ¶ 539.
Assignment for security of other debt, see also post ¶ 412; and see generally Pledges.

¶ 363. A chattel mortgage is a chose in action, and the proper subject of assignment; and the assignee has the right to direct a sale of the property pursuant to notice of foreclosure given by the assignor prior to the assignment.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 101 Mich. 590.

¶ 364. The assignee under a bona fide mortgagee of chattels is entitled to the same protection as the mortgagee in an action of replevin brought by a claimant of the goods.—Mayer v. Soulier, 48 Mich. 411.

¶ 365. After the execution of a chattel mortgage upon a quantity of saw-logs to secure the payment of discounted drafts drawn by the mortgagee upon the mortgagors, it having been agreed between the parties to the mortgage and the holders of the drafts that the mortgagors should waive the conditions of the power of sale, and that the mortgagee should proceed under the mortgage, manufacture the logs into lumber, and market the same, pay the expenses, take up the drafts, and pay the surplus, if any, to the mortgagors, the mortgagee, in case he assigns the mortgage to himself as trustee, is, as assignee, entitled to follow the mortgaged property by trover against one buying it from the sawyer in possession.—Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12.

¶ 366. The assignee of a mortgage of a vessel takes it with all the rights and powers which were possessed by the mortgagee: and no equities existing between several mortgagors will deprive the assignee of any of the usual remedies for the enforcement of the security.—Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 Mich. 224.

¶ 367. Notes of a mortgagor, indorsed by its former president to a bank and taken before the mortgage and not on its credit, belong to the bank and not to its cashier, a mortgagee in trust for it to secure the bank on paper of the mortgagor, held by it; and accordingly a junior mortgagee demanding assignment of the mortgage on payment cannot claim the surrender of such notes as collateral to the mortgage.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 101 Mich. 590.

See also post ¶ 468.
Payment of mortgage as against assignee, see also pos ¶ 402.

¶ 368. One who buys a chattel mortgage with knowledge of an understanding between mortgagor and mortgagee that it shall be released on payment of the sum that he gives for it cannot, against a creditor of the mortgagor, enforce it for more than he has paid with interest.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 369. The assignee of a mortgage of chattels stands only in the mortgagee's position, and cannot, where the mortgagee could not, maintain replevin against a sheriff who levies on the goods under execution against the mortgagor while they are in the possession of the mortgagor's lessee.—First Nat. Bank v. Summers, 75 Mich. 107.

¶ 370. The assignee of a chattel mortgage given to secure future advances does not acquire any rights if such advances are never made.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 560.

¶ 371. The assignee of a chattel mortgage takes it only for what it is worth as between the original parties unless it secures negotiable paper.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 569.

¶ 372. Where a chattel mortgage that is given for a fixed sum, but really to secure future advances, of which none is made, is assigned in good faith and for value to one who supposes it to be given for an actual indebtedness, the assignee obtains no greater rights than the mortgagee had, unless it is given to secure negotiable paper, when, if the assignment is made before maturity, he holds the paper and the mortgage discharged of pre-existing equities.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 568.

§ 89. ——Under mortgage to secure negotiable paper.

¶ 373. A chattel mortgage, given to secure negotiable paper, and the note it secures, if assigned before maturity, is held by assignee discharged of pre-existing equities.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 568.

¶ 374. One who purchases a note secured by a mortgage, and takes no legal transfer by indorsement of the note or by assignment of the mortgage, acquires only an equitable interest, which, however, enables him to deal with the mortgage for all beneficial purposes, and if he afterwards purchases the mortgagor's interest subject to a levy, his title becomes complete except as against levy, which he is estopped from denying, and makes his seizure of the chattels while under the levy a trespass; he cannot insist that the judgment was satisfied by a levy which he himself has unlawfully defeated.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

§ 90. Creditor as assignee.

¶ 375. A creditor who buys a chattel mortgage given by his debtor has no greater rights under it than any other assignee; as purchaser he gets only the mortgagee's right; as creditor he might contest the validity of the mortgage by attaching or levying on the goods.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 569.

¶ 376. Whether the mortgagee in a trust chattel mortgage securing several of the mortgagor's creditors can assign to one of the creditors his interest in the mortgage, quære.—Simon v. Leland, 105 Mich. 226.

§ 91. Assignment of mortgage without debt.

Right of foreclosure by assignee of mortgage as trustee for owner of debt, see post § 123, ¶ 462.

¶ 377. A finding of facts which shows that a chattel mortgage was assigned to the plaintiff for a valuable consideration, and not showing that there was any other instrument witnessing the debt, or to which the mortgage was collateral, ought to be understood as a finding of an assignment which was effectual to pass the interest of the mortgagee. Whether the assignment of a mortgage collateral to some other instrument by which the debt is witnessed does not convey the mortgage to the assignee as trustee for the owner of the debt, so as to authorize that trustee to maintain a suit at law for the property mortgaged or for its proceeds, quære.—Giddey v. Uhl, 27 Mich. 94.

V. RENEWALS AND EXTENSIONS.

§ 92. Renewal and effect of nonrenewal.

Inserting renewal stipulation in mortgage on file, see also ante ¶ 41.

Effect of notice of unrenewed mortgage, see ante § 37.

Effect of nonrenewal to let second mortgage into priority, see also ante ¶ 160.

Renewal as payment, see post § 102.

Renewal and subsequent renewal, see Comp. L., §§ 11991, 11992; see also Pub. Acts, 1915, No. 163.

¶ 378. The annual renewal of a mortgage is required by Comp. L. 1871, § 4709 (How. St., § 6196), not only for the information of the mortgagor's general creditors, but for that of subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith.—Briggs v. Mette, 42 Mich. 12.

¶ 379. The foregoing decision from Briggs v. Mette, 42 Mich. 12, seems to have been overruled by decisions that only those who became creditors after the expiration of one year from filing and before the renewal would be protected.—Wade v. Strachan, 71 Mich. 459; Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 380. A chattel mortgage not renewed until after one year from its filing does not lose its force as against a second mortgage taken within the year; the second mortgage in such case is not one "in good faith" within the meaning of How. St., § 6196; and a renewal after the year preserves the lien except as against those acquiring rights in the interval.—Wade v. Strachan, 71 Mich. 459.

¶ 381. Where a husband as security for money he owes his wife gives her a bill of sale which is properly filed but not renewed, the goods never being delivered to the mortgagee, an execution upon the goods while the bill is unrenewed, holds.—Krum v. Downey, 98 Mich. 511.

¶ 382. Failure to renew a chattel mortgage does not avoid it as to creditors of the mortgagor who became such prior to the expiration of one year from the filing thereof. —Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 383. Where an affidavit of renewal of a chattel mortgage was filed by the mortgagee after the expiration of the period prescribed by statute therefor but before general creditors of the mortgagor had obtained a mortgage or acquired any lien on the mortgaged property, held that the rights of such creditors of the mortgagor and the rights of the mortgagee were the same as if the affidavit had been made and filed within the prescribed period.—Symons Bros. & Co. v. Brink, 194 Mich. 389.

¶ 384. Under How. St., § 6196, providing "every such mortgage shall cease to be valid as against * * * subsequent purchasers * * * in good faith" if not renewed at the end of a year, the question of good faith of a purchaser at execution sale in hostility to the mortgage after the year and failure to renew was for the jury on evidence that part of the mortgage debt was fictitious for the purpose of defeating the execution creditor and that mortgagee knew of the debt to such creditor.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 385. Where a mortgage has been duly filed, and during the first year thereafter the goods are taken by the mortgagee into his own possession, the provision of the statute as to renewals does not apply unless the property is again put into the mortgagor's possession.—Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed. 779.

¶ 386. A renewal affidavit is not necessary in order to render a recorded chattel mortgage valid as against an attaching creditor, where public notice was given of the sale of the mortgaged property and an attorney for the mortgagee was in possession of the property and was on the point of selling the same at public auction when the property was seized by the attaching creditor.—Kratzmer v. Detroit Lumber Co., 195 Mich. 570.

§ 94. Place for renewal.

¶ 387. An affidavit of renewal of a chattel mortgage made before and filed by the deputy clerk of the city of Ionia in the clerk's absence is valid, if the deputy has been regularly appointed by the clerk and has taken and filed the oath of office.—Tower v. Welker, 93 Mich. 332.

§ 95. Sufficiency of affidavit.

Affidavit for renewal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11991; see also Pub. Acts 1915, No. 163.

¶ 388. An affidavit for the renewal of a chattel mortgage is insufficient if it does not distinctly indicate the amount to which the mortgagee was entitled. So held where the mortgage secured an unexpired lease containing various stipulations, and there was nothing to show whether the lessee had observed the covenants or whether any rent remained due, the affidavit stating merely "that there was due and remaining unpaid on said mortgage the conditions as mentioned in said chattel mortgage lease, and that the mortgagee's interests in the chattels therein described remain unchanged and are hereby renewed for the amount above written."—Briggs v. Mette, 42 Mich. 12.

¶ 389. A renewal affidavit which states that a certain sum "constitutes the amount of interest" of the mortgagees in the property, mentioned in the mortgage, is sufficient.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 390. An affidavit of renewal of a chattel mortgage upon a stock of lumber and other material kept for sale in connection therewith, including all other lumber, stock or material of every kind which the mortgagors might thereafter add to said business, which states that the mortgagee's interest in the chattels described in the mortgage remains unchanged, and is hereby renewed for the amount claimed to be due upon the mortgage, is sufficient to continue the mortgage in force as to such after-acquired property.—Eddy v. McCall, 77 Mich. 242.

¶ 391. Where a mortgage shows upon its face that it is to be a continual indemnity, an affidavit of renewal stating that there is due and unpaid the sum for which the mortgage was given, and that the mortgagee's interest in the chattels remains unchanged, is sufficient, without stating the actual amount of the matured indebtedness at the date of renewal, so long as the obligations, both matured and not matured, exceed the sum mentioned.—Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103.

¶ 392. Where an affidavit for the renewal of a mortgage described the mortgage as filed "with the clerk of the township of Bridgeport in Saginaw county, Michigan," and the attestation clause was, "Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of August, 1879, at Bridgeport," it was held that the venue was sufficiently given.—Griffin v. Forrest, 49 Mich. 309.

Sufficiency of record for filing, see ante § 83. Notice as dispensing with refiling, see ante ¶ 155.

¶ 393. The statute providing that a chattel mortgage shall cease to be valid after the expiration of one year unless, within thirty days next preceding, an affidavit of renewal shall be filed (Comp. L. 1871, § 4709, How. St., § 6196), does not require the hour of filing to be noted, but merely provides that the clerk "shall indorse the time when the same was filed." Held, that a renewal purporting to have been made on the anniversary of the filing of the mortgage is therefore sufficient.—Griffin v. Forrest, 49 Mich. 309.

§ 97. Effect of renewal on priority.

¶ 394. A new contract of indebtedness, not entitled to preference, and discharging the old debt, was not created by the mere giving of notes secured by a subsequent mortgage by a creditor entitled to a lien on goods for advances made without notice of a previous unfiled mortgage, nor did the extension by such mortgage of the time of payment, or a recital therein securing future indebtedness, alter the creditor's rights as against the mortgage not seasonably filed.—Dempsey v. Pforzheimer, 86 Mich. 652.

¶ 395. The owner of a stock of goods mortgaged them to secure an indorser of his note, after which he sold the goods and agreed with the purchaser to secure a release of the mortgage, and the latter gave a chattel mortgage which was assigned with his consent and duly recorded. The vendor informed the first mortgagee of the sale, and of the buyer's desire to give another mortgage and to have the first one released, whereupon the first mortgagee executed the release with the understanding that he was to have the same interest in the new as in the old mortgage, but as a matter of fact the vendor procured and filed an assignment to him of the second mortgage, the purchaser of the goods claiming to have been defrauded in the amount and value of the goods sold him sought to rescind the sale and attached the goods which were replevied by the first mortgagee. On trial of the replevin suit, it was held that the first mortgagee occupied the same relative position to the purchaser as he did under the first mortgage, and that the vendor and assignee of the second mortgage were not agents of the first mortgagee, and the latter was not chargeable with their knowledge of the alleged fraud, and that he was a bona fide holder of the second mortgage. —Sanford v. Pettit, 83 Mich. 499.

Time for renewal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11991; see also Pub. Acts 1915, No. 163.

¶ 396. A mortgage dated July 31, 1882, was filed October 2, 1882, and a renewal affidavit sworn to before the township clerk was filed July 26, 1883. Held, that the renewal was ineffective.—Reynolds v. Case, 60 Mich. 76.

¶ 397. Where the original filing was subsequent to the date of the original mortgage and the renewal was more than 30 days before one year from the filing, held, that the mortgage remained in full force as notice for one year from the original filing.—Reynolds v. Case, 60 Mich. 76.

¶ 398. An attempted renewal of a chattel mortgage filed nearly eight months before the expiration of the year in which it was originally filed is not in compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 9526, How. St., 2nd. Ed., § 11410, providing that a chattel mortgage shall cease to be valid as against the creditors of the person making the same or subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith after the expiration of one year from filing the same or a copy thereof, unless within thirty days next preceding the expiration of such year an affidavit of renewal shall be filed.—Kratzmer v. Detroit Lumber Co., 195 Mich. 570.

¶ 399. Where an affidavit for the renewal of a chattel mortgage is invalid because filed more than thirty days before the expiration of the year in which the mortgage was originally filed and an attaching creditor has both constructive and actual notice of the claims of the mortgagee before his attempt to levy an attachment at the time the property is about to be sold at foreclosure, the mortgage lien is perpetuated and remains paramount to the attachment lien.—Kratzmer v. Detroit Lumber Co., 195 Mich. 570.

¶ 400. A mortgage duly filed is not void because given in renewal of old mortgages that were never filed.—Johnson v. Stellwagen, 67 Mich. 10.

VI. PAYMENT, REDEMPTION AND DISCHARGE.

§ 100. Payment or satisfaction of debt.

Necessity of tender or payment to entitle subsequent purchaser to possession, see ante § 73.
Various media of payment and modes of satisfaction, see post §§ 101-104.
Evidence to prove extinguishment of debt, see post § 106.
Discharge of mortgage by tender, merger or release, see post §§ 107-111.
Bill to restrain foreclosure of discharged mortgage, see post § 116.
How chattel mortgage may be discharged, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11996.

¶ 401. A chattel mortgage does not cease to be a lien, and the debt it secures is not to be considered paid, merely because the mortgagor has an offset against his creditor exceeding the debt.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615.

¶ 402. A woman who held a bill of sale of personal property in security for a debt proceeded to sell the property. Part of it was covered by a chattel mortgage, and at her request this mortgage was purchased by a third person, and held for her. She sold property enough to pay both debts, and of that which was sold enough was included in the chattel mortgage to pay that off. Afterwards her son, who was cognizant of all the facts, took an assignment of the chattel mortgage. Held, that the chattel mortgage must be deemed satisfied.—Long v. Moore, 56 Mich. 23.

¶ 403. B. sold some horses and took back a mortgage, which he assigned to L., who seized the horses under it and re-assigned to B., who afterwards joined in a note with him for an individual debt, and to secure it gave another mortgage on the same horses. Afterwards, on paying L.'s note when it was past due, B. cut his own name off and assigned the note to P. in order to keep it alive against L., and P., without B.'s knowledge, assigned it to C., but paid B. the balance due from L. B. then demanded the horses from L. under the original mortgage, and the officer seizing them took them from C., who brought trover as for their conversion. Held that on receiving the amount due from L., B. had a right to suppose the transaction with him ended, and that he had a right to foreclose the original mortgage.—Corbitt v. Brong, 44 Mich. 150.

¶ 404. Where one holding property in mortgage converts it to his own use, the mortgage debt is thereby satisfied to the extent only of the value of the property.—Davis v. Rider, 5 Mich. 423.

§ 101. ——By labor or services.

¶ 405. The buyer of a portable saw-mill gave a series of notes for the unpaid portion of purchase price and secured them by a chattel mortgage on the mill. He also made a contract with the seller whereby he was to saw for him, and the latter was to be allowed to withhold one-third of the payments due for this work until it should amount to the unpaid balance. He did not do so, however, and when so much sawing had been done that a third of the payments therefor would have completed the payment for the mill, the first note only had been actually paid. As the remaining notes were not taken up, the seller demanded the property, and as the buyer refused to give it up he took it on a writ of replevin. Held, that as the seller had not withheld the money to which he was entitled, and it was therefore never allowed to apply on the mortgage, it did not follow that the mortgage was extinguished from the fact merely that enough sawing had been done to satisfy it.—McRae v. Davenport, 51 Mich. 633.

§ 102. ——By substituting or renewing notes for debt.

Change or renewal of debt as affecting lien, see ante § 97.

¶ 406. Where the purchaser of a stock of goods has given in part payment a mortgage on the goods, which, for the protection of his credit, is withheld from filing but deposited in a bank for safe keeping and collection, and subsequently the parties join in a note to the bank, which is discounted, and out of the proceeds the mortgagee is paid off, and the mortgagor gives his note for what remains due on the mortgage debt to the bank, which thereupon surrenders the joint note, the transaction does not operate as a discharge of the mortgage.—Hyma v. Three Rivers National Bank, 79 Mich. 167.

¶ 407. A chattel mortgage was filed April 12, 1876, to secure a note payable in one year from April 10, 1876, and on April 2, 1877, a note for the amount left unpaid was given and the old note given up. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the mortgage remained in force as security for the new note. Held, error to charge in replevin by the holder of the mortgage that there was no question of its valid existence to April 12, 1877, and that its filing was notice until that time; it was for the jury to determine whether it also secured the new note.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

Effect of irregular sale, see post § 137.

¶¶ 408, 409. The foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, and the purchase of the property by the mortgagee, subject to two prior mortgages held by him covering the same and other goods, were held not to operate as a discharge of the prior mortgages and a payment of the debts secured thereby.—Rose v. Page, 82 Mich. 105.

§ 104. ——Mortgage to secure indorsement or other secondary obligation.

¶ 410. The indorsers of a note were secured by a chattel mortgage from the maker. On the maturity of the note, without waiting for protest, they took it up, giving their own paper, which they finally paid. Held, that they did not lose their mortgage security.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

§ 105. Application of payments.

Application of proceeds of foreclosure, see post § 134.
General law as to application of payments, see Payment, III.

¶ 411. A mortgagor's monthly payments in excess of interest on a past-due chattel mortgage must be applied on the principal, though denominated by the parties a compensation for extensions of time.—Bateman v Blake, 81 Mich. 227.

§ 106. Evidence of payment or satisfaction.

Evidence and proofs of payment, see generally Payment, V.

¶ 412. A chattel mortgage was given to secure the payment of eleven promissory notes, and five of these notes with the mortgage were assigned by the mortgagee to the plaintiffs as collateral security for a debt due them. Defendants subsequently levied upon a part of the mortgaged property by virtue of executions against the mortgagor, and plaintiffs sued them in trover. Held, that it was competent for defendants in this suit to show that plaintiffs had appropriated sufficient of the mortgaged property, before the mortgage became due, to satisfy their debt, since such evidence would show an extinguishment of plaintiffs' title to the property, and the residuum of the mortgage interest, if any, would revert to the mortgagee.—Place v. Grant, 9 Mich. 42.

¶ 413. If there were any facts to excuse the failure to apply the moneys received on the sale in satisfaction of the mortgage and a security bill of sale, they should have been affirmatively established, as the sale prima facie paid it where such mortg ge was assigned to a third person at the request of the holder of such bill of sale, and held for her, and where the personal property was sold for enough to pay both debts.—Long v. Moore, 56 Mich. 23.

Sale by mortgagor's assignee to mortgagee, effect of, see Assignments for Creditors, ¶ 162.

¶ 414. Chattel mortgage assigned by a debtor of a firm to a member thereof in payment of a firm debt, held paid by a bill of sale taken for the firm by another partner upon a purchase of the mortgaged property for the purpose of securing other indebtedness.—Rowley v. Bates, 97 Mich. 406.

¶ 415. A retail dealer secured his purchases of stock by giving ch ttel mortgages thereon. He afterwards gave to the same mortgagee another chattel mortgage, as to which it was disputed whether it was meant to supersede the earlier ones or not. The mortgagee received more than enough money to satisfy the latest mortgage, and, having seized the stock under one of the earlier ones, was sued in trover by the mortgagor. He conceded on the trial that if the last mortgage superseded the former ones he had no claim under it, and did not rely on it as a defense to the action. The jury found specially that it did supersede the earlier mortgages. Held, that this finding was conclusive, and that the mortgagee's concession left him without any justification for seizing the mortgagor's stock.—Kramer v. Gustin, 53 Mich. 291.

Necessity of tender of debt to hold mortgagee in trover, see ante § 70, ¶ 310.
Refusal of tender as forfeiture, see post § 125.
Decreeing surrender on completing tender, see also post ¶ 437.
Necessity of tender or payment to entitle subsequent purchasers to possession, see ante § 73.
General requisites of tender, see Payment, Tender and Deposit, I, B.
How mortgages may be discharged, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11996.
Penalty for refusal to discharge chattel mortgage, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11997.

¶ 416. A tender of the amount due at maturity discharges the lien of the mortgage; and if the mortgagee refuses to receive it and deliver up the property he cannot have the amount of his debt allowed, by way of recoupment or otherwise, in an action of trover brought by the mortgagor to recover the value of the property.—Fuller v. Parrish, 3 Mich. 211.

¶ 417. Under a chattel mortgage which authorizes, in default of payment, the sale of the property at public or private sale to s tisfy the debt, interest and reasonable expenses, and the seizure of the property at any time when the mortgagee shall deem himself insecure, and its disposition "in the manner above specified," a tender of the principal, with interest to date and accrued costs, the mortgagee having seized the property under the insecurity clause, discharges the property from the lien of the mortgage, and renders its further detention illegal.—Shattuck v. Cole, 91 Mich. 580.

By conversion by mortgagee in possession, see also ante § 70, ¶¶ 306-308.
How proved, see post § 111.
Release of mortgage as waiver of forfeiture, see also post ¶ 458.
General law of releases, see Releases.
Agreement for sale and account as consideration for release, see Contracts, V, B.

¶ 418. An instrument purporting, for a valuable consideration, to "assign, release, and deliver" to a third person all right, title, and interest in the security or property covered by a chattel mortgage therein described, is an assignment of the mortgage, and not a discharge thereof.—Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Sloan, 115 Mich. 151.

¶ 419. Silence by a mortgagee who is present when a bill of sale of the mortgaged property is read, in which a portion of the property is reserved by the vendor and mortgagor, and in which the vendee assumes the payment of the mortgage debt, will not amount to a consent to a release of the reserved property from the mortgage, or estop him from thereafter enforcing its lien thereon.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497.

§ 110. ——Suing on debt or for value of property.

¶ 420. The commencement of a suit upon a promissory note does not extinguish the lien of a chattel mortgage collateral to the note.—Thurber v. Jewett, 8 Mich. 295.

¶ 421. In a bill to restrain the foreclosure of a mortgage of chattels complainant relied upon the discharge of the mortgage lien by a tender. The evidence of a valid tender was conflicting; but it was shown that in a subsequent replevin suit between the same parties, involving the right to the same chattels on other grounds, the holder of the mortgage had recovered judgment for the value, taking no account of the mortgage as an existing lien. This showing was held to support the allegation that the lien had been discharged.—Daugherty v. Byles, 41 Mich. 61.

§ 111. ——Evidence of release.

¶ 422. As bearing on the probability of a release by the mortgagee of part of mortgaged chattels, evidence of the value of the property covered by the mortgage is admissible.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497.

¶ 423. Evidence of the value of the rest of mortgaged chattels is admissible as bearing on the probability of the release of part of such chattels.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497.

¶ 424. The evidence does not sustain a finding that a mortgagee had released certain of the mortgaged property when it shows no express agreement that the property should be released, but only acts and words from which a release might be inferred.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497.

Compliance with power of sale to cut off right of redemption, see post § 125.

¶ 425. A mortgagor of chattels or claimants under him, such as his creditors or assignee, have the right to redeem the property by paying the debt when due and before sale.—Brink v. Freoff, 40 Mich. 610.

¶ 426. The right of redemption is not lost until there has been a sale of the property, so that some one sets up a title no longer conditional.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 427. It cannot be said that a year to redeem was given by virtue of the original agreement to advance money and take a bill of sale in security, where the lender swore that the agreement gave only 30 days to redeem and the only other person who knew the terms of it, an agent of the borrower, did not testify.—Farrell v. Danbury, 141 Mich. 81.

Right of redemption by junior incumbrancer omitted from notice, see post ¶ 478.

¶ 428. The right of an execution creditor to redeem from a chattel mortgage attaches as soon as a lien is acquired by the levy of execution on the property it covers, and is not postponed till after sale on the execution.—Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443.

¶ 429. An execution creditor, upon payment of a chattel mortgage which is a prior incumbrance upon the chattels on which his execution has been levied, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee; and to that end he has a right to demand and receive an assignment of the mortgage.—Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443.

¶ 430. The holder of a subsequent lien upon mortgaged chattels has the same right to protect his interest in the property as if the prior lien be of any other nature, and may pay off the mortgage.—Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443.

See also ante ¶¶ 425-428.

¶ 431. A mortgagor of chattels, notwithstanding the forfeiture of the condition of the mortgage, may redeem in equity at any time before the mortgagee has foreclosed by a reduction of the property into possession or by a sale pursuant to the power conferred by the mortgage.—Van Brunt v. Wakelee, 11 Mich. 177.

¶ 432. Testimony of the borrower that after the money was advanced and a bill of sale given as security, he and the lender agreed that a chattel mortgage should be given with a year to redeem, that it was executed and tendered but after looking it over the lender declined to accept it, that they then agreed to a chattel mortgage with six months to redeem but that the lender thereafter refused to accept any mortgage at all, that thereafter the lender insisted on the borrower's paying a note to a third person on which the money was raised which the borrower tried to do, failing by the fault of the lender or the third person, does not tend to show that the original agreement was modified by making the redemption time one year.—Farrell v. Danbury, 141 Mich. 81.

§ 115. Amount required to redeem.

Taking possession of goods less in value than amount of mortgage, see also ante ¶ 311.

¶ 433. Where a mortgagor of chattels has difficulty in ascertaining under what claim the holders of the mortgages as assignees are holding the property, they having first caused it to be seized on execution, it is a question for the jury whether they are acting in good faith and entitled, upon redemption, to exact their costs of seizure.—Shattuck v. Cole, 91 Mich. 580.

§ 116. Bill to redeem or enjoin foreclosure.

Bill to redeem by junior incumbrancer omitted from notice, see post ¶ 478.

¶ 434. A mortgagor of chattels may maintain a bill in equity to redeem after condition broken, and after the mortgagee has taken possession, if brought within a reasonable time.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 435. A bill in equity which sets forth the facts upon which depends the equitable right to redeem mortgaged chattels after condition broken and possession taken by the mortgagee, and alleges that an amount stated was due on a day stated, and that complainant had offered to pay that amount, although it does not in so many express words offer to pay what may be found due upon the mortgage debt, contains all the substantial requisites of a bill to redeem, where the question arises upon a hearing upon the evidence and merits without a demurrer.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 436. The substantial meaning of a prayer to be allowed to redeem, in a bill in equity brought for that purpose, is to be allowed to redeem by paying whatever may be found due upon the mortgage; and it makes no difference in this regard that it is claimed in the bill that the whole debt has been paid, as this is always open to denial by the answer, and when so denied the question of the amount due is put in issue, and if anything should be found due the prayer must still on the hearing be construed as one to be allowed to redeem by paying what may thus be found due.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 437. Where mortgagors file a bill to restrain the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, and for its surrender to them on payment of the sum admitted by the bill to be due thereon, which sum the complainants claim to have tendered to the assignee of the mortgage, and the court finds that the mortgage, so far as it had ever been a valid lien, was discharged by the tender, a decree should be made for the surrender of the mortgage upon payment of the amount of the tender.—Costigan v. Howard, 100 Mich. 335.

§ 117. Subrogation and assignment on redemption.

See also ante ¶ 429.

Collaterals passing as incident to mortgage, see also ante ¶ 367.

Necessity of subrogation to give second mortgagee right of action against third persons for tort, see post § 143.

¶ 438. An execution creditor redeeming the chattels from a prior mortgage thereon is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights and to receive an assignment of the mortgage.—Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443.

¶ 439. Tender of payment of a debt secured by mortgage, by a junior incumbrancer accompanied by a demand for an assignment of the mortgage, does not extinguish the mortgage.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 120 Mich. 199.

¶ 440. A second chattel mortgagee tendering the holder of a first mortgage on the property the amount of his claim, has a right to have such first mortgage assigned to him.—Williams Bros. Co. v. Hanmer, 132 Mich. 635.

¶ 441. In a suit by a second chattel mortgagee to compel the holder of a first mortgage on some of the property covered by the second mortgage, to assign the mortgage to him, it is no defense that one of the signers of the notes secured was an accommodation maker where there was nothing on the face of the notes or mortgage to show that part of the property was owned by one maker and part by another, or that part of the debt was to be paid by each, or any suggestion that any part of the property was to be sold before the other.—Williams Bros. Co. v. Hanmer, 132 Mich. 635.

¶ 442. A junior incumbrancer who has tendered payment of the debt accompanied by a demand for an assignment of the mortgage, may maintain trover against the first mortgagee for conversion of the mortgaged property where the latter disposes of the equity of redemption so as to impair the junior incumbrancer's rights.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 120 Mich. 199.

§ 118. Restoration of property on discharge.

Title as between the parties, see ante § 61.

Remedy for failure to restore upon tender, see post ¶ 515.

Mortgagor's remedy for retention of property after discharge of debt, see post § 138.

¶ 443. It seems that the mortgagor of chattels has the right on tendering payment to demand possession of them if still held by the mortgagee; but the mortgagee would be entitled to a reasonable time in which to comply.—Brink v. Freoff, 40 Mich. 610.

¶ 444. A chattel mortgagee who, having taken the goods into his possession for safe keeping, tenders them back to the mortgagor on the latter's paying the debt, need not return them except at the place where he has stored them for safe keeping.—Gale Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 78 Mich. 86.

¶¶ 445, 446. Where, on the release of a mortgage on a stock of goods given to secure part of their purchase price, the mortgagor agrees to receive the goods then on hand as consignee, such goods to be sold on the mortgagees' account and accounted for on demand, the mortgagees being authorized to take possession whenever they have reasonable cause to deem themselves insecure, a finding in favor of the mortgagees on the issue as to their right of possession will not bar the mortgagor's right to tender the amount of his indebtedness to the mortgagees, and thereupon to demand and have his goods returned to him.—Norris, Allister & Co. v. Vosburgh, 98 Mich. 426.

¶ 447. A mortgagee in possession who sells part of the goods for enough to pay the debt becomes bailee of the rest, and if he denies the debtor's title thereto is liable in trover.—Iler v. Baker, 82 Mich. 226.

§ 119. ——Rights of other creditors.

Remedy of creditors and third persons on irregular or invalid sale, see post § 139.

¶ 448. It is a fraud upon the mortgagor's creditors to assert a mortgage lien after the mortgage has been paid, and if such creditors subsequently levy upon the property the mortgagees cannot maintain replevin against the officer.—Mueller v. Provo, 80 Mich. 475.

§ 120. Accounting for sale price or surplus.

See also post ¶ 519.

Accountability of mortgagee to mortgagor, see also ante ¶ 268.

Mortgagor's right to credit for value of goods sold privately in violation of mortgage provision for sale, see ante § 132.

Mortgagor's right to accounting for proceeds of fraudulent or irregular sale, see post § 138.

General practice on accounting suits, see Accounting Suits.

¶ 449. Where possession of a building on leased ground has been taken by the vendor under an agreement of sale that amounted to a chattel mortgage, and where the building has been subjected without foreclosure proceedings to the lien of such agreement, the vendor is required to account as against the vendee for the value of the building in excess of his lien.—Read v. Horner, 90 Mich. 152.

¶ 450. The rule that a party must come into equity with clean hands applies as against a complainant in a bill for an accounting, where such complainant under the guise of an assignment from the real party in interest sought to obtain an accounting for the benefit of such real party who had not acted in good faith, from a trustee as to the proceeds of a sale under a chattel mortgage.—Maher v. Hastie, 156 Mich. 144.

¶ 451. Two livery-stable keepers, after mortgaging their livery stock to secure the payment of part of its purchase price, sold part of the stock, and substituted therefor other stock of like character, after which one of them sold his interest in the stock and business to the other, who assumed the payment of the mortgage and accompanying note. The mortgagee sought to foreclose his mortgage. The mortgagor who had assumed the payment of the mortgage forbade the mortgagee from seizing the substituted property. Thereupon the mortgagee, who had seized the entire property, turned over to said mortgagor the substituted property, and he, with the assistance of the other mortgagor, sold it, the latter stating to the purchaser that the mortgage did not cover said substituted property, and that the mortgagee had no right thereto. The mortgagee sold the remainder of the property which he had seized, and then sued the mortgagors upon their note. The mortgagor who had sold his interest in the property alone defended, and sought to charge plaintiff with the value of the substituted property. Held, that he is not in position to insist that the note be reduced by the amount which said property would have brought at sale under the mortgage.—Cole v. Shaw, 103 Mich. 505.

VII. DEFAULT AND FORECLOSURE BY SALE OR OTHERWISE.

§ 121. Default and right to foreclose.

Title of mortgagee vesting by foreclosure, see also ante § 61.

Right to take possession, see ante §§ 67-69.

Default as maturing right to take possession, see ante § 68.

¶ 452. A breach in any of the conditions of a chattel mortgage will authorize seizure and foreclosure.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

¶ 453. Where, in a mortgage on a stock of goods, covenants to keep up the stock and to insure it are inserted, the provision that "a breach of these two covenants shall cause the whole sum secured to become due and payable" will not make a double breach essential to the right of foreclosure if the defeasance clause expressly authorizes foreclosure on breach of either.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 454. A vendee under a contract in the nature of a chattel mortgage, requiring him to keep chattels insured for the benefit of the vendor, cannot be placed in default for nonpayment of insurance premiums which the vendor did not pay until after seizing the proporty.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

¶ 455. A vendor selling chattels under an insecurity clause of a contract in the nature of a chattel mortgage, held not insecure as a matter of fact at the time of taking possession of and selling the property.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

¶ 456. In order to sustain an action of replevin by a mortgagor against the mortgagee, who took the property on a claim that there was default, the mortgagor may show that he relied on a warranty of a chattel for the price of which the mortgage notes were given and that the warranty was broken by the seller, defendant in replevin.—Rogers v. Ferris, 107 Mich. 126.

§ 122. ——Waiver of forfeiture and release or avoidance of mortgage.

¶ 457. The commencement of a suit upon a promissory note secured by a chattel mortgage is a waiver of the forfeiture of the condition of the mortgage.—Thurber v. Jewett, 3 Mich. 295.

¶ 458. When tenants in common of a mill, one of whom has executed to the other a mortgage on the realty and a chattel mortgage on the machinery, agree that the latter shall be ignored and canceled, and the machinery treated as part of the realty, it cannot be foreclosed and a sale thereunder is void.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

¶ 459. A mortgagor of goods who had been left in possession, and whose mortgage was not filed, made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The assignee took possession and proceeded to sell the goods in execution of his trust. The mortgagee filed a bill in equity to foreclose. Held, that as the statute declared his mortgage void as against the very parties for whom the assignee was trustee, he had no standing whatever in equity, and his bill was dismissed. If, under any harsh rule of the common law, he may have an advantage, he will be left to seek it at law.—Putnam v. Reynolds, 44 Mich. 113.

§ 123. Party entitled; assignee or comortgagee.

Rights and equities of assignees, see ante IV.

Right of foreclosure by assignee who purchased for less than its face, see post § 132.

Right as between first and second mortgagee, see also ante ¶ 309.

¶ 460. Where a mortgage is given to several persons jointly to cover separate debts, either mortgagee may enforce his own claim by foreclosure of the mortgage, or both may foreclose jointly.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

¶ 461. Under How. St., § 7344, one who holds by parol assignment a chattel mortgage and the accompanying debt, not otherwise evidenced, may foreclose in his own name at law.—Hyma v. Three Rivers National Bank, 79 Mich. 107.

¶ 462. Whether the assignment of a mortgage collateral to some other instrument by which the debt is witnessed does not convey the mortgage to the assignee as trustee for the owner of the debt, so as to authorize that trustee to maintain a suit at law for the property mortgaged or for its proceeds, quære.—Giddey v. Uhl, 27 Mich. 94.

§ 124. Time for foreclosure; laches and limitations.

Accrual of mortgagee's right of possession, see ante §§ 68, 69.

Liability of mortgagee in possession for conversion, see ante § 70.

The statutes of limitation will necessarily operate on some particular action, such as replevin, by which the right is asserted, and therefore should be treated in Limitations of Actions, which see.

¶ 463. A mortgage stating no time of payment is due without demand of payment and can be foreclosed at once.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97; Beirss v. Preston, 66 Mich. 11; McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

¶ 464. Chattel mortgages given to secure a pre-existing debt, and payable on demand, may be foreclosed at any time after demand at the mortgagee's option.—Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265.

¶ 465. Where the holder of a mortgage on a propeller neglected for more than seven years after the debt came due to assert his lien, and knowingly permitted the mortgagor to sell it to innocent purchasers meanwhile, bars himself by his own negligence from all right of foreclosure.—Harkness v. Toulmin, 25 Mich. 80.

§ 125. Mode and requisites of foreclosure in general.

¶ 466. An assertion by a mortgagee of chattels that he refused a tender, and that he should take the mortgaged chattels, was no foreclosure so long as he did not take them.—Van Brunt v. Wakelee, 11 Mich. 177.

¶ 467. A mortgage is not actually foreclosed until there has been a sale of the property so that some one sets up a title no longer conditional.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 468. No equities between several mortgagors can deprive the assignee of the mortgagee of any of the usual remedies for the enforcement of the security.—Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 Mich. 224.

§ 126. Sale under power.

Restrictions on power and power under given conditions, see post §§ 127, 128.
Notice of sale and manner and terms of sale, see post §§ 129, 130.
Mortgagee as purchaser, see post § 131.
Application of proceeds, see post § 134.
Who may question sale of mortgaged goods, see post § 140.

¶ 469. The power of sale in a chattel mortgage must be strictly pursued, but it is only necessary that it be fairly executed.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 470. Where a chattel mortgage provides specially how and upon what notice the mortgagee may sell, these express provisions preclude all implications upon the subject, and he cannot cut off the equitable right to redeem, if asserted in a reasonable time, by a sale in any other mode, except perhaps by sale to a bona fide purchaser without notice of the mortgagor's equities.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

See also ante § 62.
Agreement to consider mortgage as canceled, see ante ¶ 458.

¶ 471. The authority of the mortgagee of a stock of merchandise to sell in accordance with the terms of the mortgage may be limited by a collateral written agreement respecting the goods, made at the time the mortgage was executed, and, when such agreement exists, the instruments should be construed together in determining the rights of the parties.—Rolfe v. Burnham, 110 Mich. 660.

¶ 472. A court of equity will not permit an agreement collateral to the mortgage by the mortgagee to take charge of the business, and carry it on for the benefit of all parties, to be ignored, and a sale under the mortgage proceeded with, unless it appears that the agreement has been violated by the mortgagor or that the mortgagee was induced to enter into it by fraud.—Rolfe v. Burnham, 110 Mich. 660.

¶ 473. A mortgagee of chattels who had expressly fixed a certain time and place for payment of the mortgage, the time being a few days later than the date of the maturity of the debt, made himself a wrong-doer by seizing the chattels on the day before that which had been fixed for the payment; payment on that day would have been a satisfaction of the debt.—Baxter v. Spencer, 33 Mich. 325.

Right of possession before condition broken, see ante § 69.
Amount of goods that may be validly sold on default in instalment, see post § 133.

¶ 474. A clause in a chattel mortgage, which contains the usual power of sale, authorizing the mortgagee, at any time when he shall think himself insecured, to take possession of the mortgaged property, and dispose of the same in the manner specified in the mortgage, or in such other manner as he thinks best, gives the right, in case of a seizure thereunder, to sell at once, and before the maturity of the mortgage debt.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 101 Mich. 590; Cole v. Shaw, 103 Mich. 505.

¶ 475. A mortgagee whose lien secures the payment of several notes to become due at different times, and which is the only lien upon the property, may, with the consent of the mortgagor, as against his creditors, foreclose for the whole amount, on default in payment of the note which first becomes due.—Hogan v. Hudson, 110 Mich. 54.

Effect of lack of notice of foreclosure sale upon mortgagee's right to purchase, see post § 131.

¶ 476. A notice of a chattel mortgage sale, not giving the date or amount of the mortgage or the names of the parties, but describing the property correctly, held sufficient, there being but one mortgage on the property, and it not appearing that any one was misled by it.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 477. Where a chattel mortgage, executed prior to 1879, provided, in the power of sale, for a like notice as is required by law for constables' sales, held, that a notice omitting the names of the mortgagors and mortgagees did not invalidate a sale thereunder.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 478. The assignee of a chattel mortgage securing a number of notes transferred some with a power of sale, but retained a junior interest in the mortgage much larger than that which he transferred. The transferee foreclosed without actual notice to the holder of the junior interest; and, with no other notice to the public than by posting notices the night before the sale and tearing them down immediately afterwards; the property was sold in bulk, and not in parcels, to purchasers who were in collusion with the mortgagor, for very much less than its actual value, which was sufficient to cover the whole debt. Held, that the assignee holding the junior interest should have had actual notice of the sale, and that he could maintain a redemption bill against the foreclosure purchasers, and under the general prayer therein have them account to him as trustees in their own wrong, and obtain payment from them of the notes secured by his interest in the mortgage.—Culbertson v. Young, 50 Mich. 190.

¶ 479. Where a chattel mortgage provides for a private sale in case of default and makes no provision for notice to the mortgagor, a sale after the debt is due is valid without such notice.—Rose v. Page, 82 Mich. 105.

§ 130. ——Method, place and terms of sale.

Necessity of sale giving unconditional title, see ante § 125.

Violation of mortgage provision for public sale, see also post ¶ 489.

Right of creditors and third person's right to insist on regularity of sale, see also post § 139.

¶ 480. A mortgagor may authorize the mortgagee to sell the mortgaged property at public or private sale; and, if no method of sale is specified, the mortgagee may sell at public auction or at private sale, by giving due notice to the mortgagor of the time and place of sale.—Fitzgerald v. McCandlish, 89 Mich. 400.

¶ 481. Foreclosure proceedings are not invalidated as to other creditors of the mortgagor by the fact that, with his consent, the property is sold in bulk instead of in parcels, where the mortgage does not designate the manner of sale, and the sale is so made in good faith, with the intention of procuring the highest price obtainable.—Hogan v. Hudson, 110 Mich. 54.

¶ 482. Where the mortgage is on an entire vessel a foreclosure sale should be of the entirety; the interests of the mortgagors should not be sold separately.—Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 Mich. 224.

¶ 483. Where a mortgage of timber provided that on default the mortgagee should be permitted to sell at public auction or at his option at private sale with or without notice, the mortgagee was not guilty of a conversion of the logs by the fact that he took possession of them through a deputy sheriff and had them towed to market for the purpose of selling them, and at the same time logs of another commingled with the mortgaged logs were also taken along, no claim being made to ownership in such logs.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 143 Mich. 514.

¶ 484. There is no inflexible rule requiring the mortgagee to sell the mortgaged chattels at the place of seizure.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 143 Mich. 514.

¶ 485. A sale on credit by the mortgagee of timber of which he is in possession after default does not amount to a conversion on his part; while a mortgagee should sell only for cash the only penalty for breach of this duty is to hold him responsible for any damage caused by his failure to do so.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 143 Mich. 514.

Right of mortgagee to buy in on sale to foreclose, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11995.

¶ 486. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9530, authorizing a chattel mortgagee to fairly and in good faith purchase the property at the foreclosure sale, a purchase by the mortgagee at a foreclosure sale of which the mortgagor has had no notice for a grossly inadequate price is void.—Castner v. Darby, 128 Mich. 241.

¶ 487. One of two mortgagees may buy the mortgaged goods on a foreclosure; How. St., § 6200, does not require that both should be present and bid together, or that one should purchase in the names of both.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

§ 132. Extent of sale; excessiveness.

Property described in mortgage, see ante §§ 15-17.

¶ 488. One who buys a mortgage for a sum less than its face, the amount being fixed by an arrangement between mortgagor and mortgagee of which he has knowledge, cannot enforce it against a creditor of the mortgagor for more than he has paid, with interest.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 489. A chattel mortgage provided that goods seized under it should be sold at public auction after notice, and that the power of sale should be limited to so much of the property as the sale should show was needed to pay the debt. The mortgagee, however, retailed part of the goods at private sale. Held that as he did not observe the method expressly agreed on for liquidating the value of the goods, the mortgagor could elect to have the amount to be sold ascertained as in other cases, and in an action on the note secured by the mortgage the jury should have been charged to find the market value of the goods sold at private sale.—Botsford v. Murphy, 47 Mich. 536.

¶ 490. A sale of logs under a chattel mortgage cannot be said to be characterized by bad faith or unreasonableness where logs amounting to $5,300 were sold to satisfy an indebtedness of $4,950.40.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 153 Mich. 363.

¶ 491. A chattel mortgagee of logs is not bound to sell logs one by one until he realizes enough to satisfy the mortgage, but may sell the logs in quantities, and, so long as he acts reasonably and in good faith, is liable only for the surplus of the proceeds of the logs sold, after satisfaction of the debt.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 153 Mich. 363. (Moore, J., dissenting, upon the ground that the evidence showed an excessive sale.)

¶ 492. Under a conveyance of chattels by way of security, containing a defeasance clause operative when sufficient should be realized to pay the indebtedness secured, and providing for a reverter of the remainder after sufficient had been sold to satisfy the indebtedness, it was immaterial by what name the instrument was called, and trover was maintainable for a sale of more than was sufficient for such satisfaction.—Haynes v. Hobbs, 136 Mich. 117.

¶ 493. A receiver who sells property as mortgaged which the mortgage does not include is liable in trover for the conversion, without demand, even though he believed the property was so included.—Kenney v. Ranney, 96 Mich. 617.

§ 133. ——Instalments not yet due.

¶ 494. Upon default in payment of an instalment of a debt secured by chattel mortgage, the mortgagee can take possession of all the mortgaged property and sell enough to make the amount due, with interest and costs; but where the property consists of several articles, no more can be sold than is necessary to make good the instalment then due.—Brink v. Freoff, 40 Mich. 610.

¶ 495. A mortgagee of chattels seized the property when only one instalment was due, and sold it to a third person for the satisfaction of the whole mortgage, and the mortgagor brought suit against the mortgagee to recover the value of the property which had been illegally sold. Held, that he was entitled to recover the value of the chattels sold after satisfaction of the first instalment, together with special damages, if any were shown, but with deduction of the amount that then remained unpaid on the mortgage.—Brink v. Freoff, 44 Mich. 69.

Application of payments on mortgage debt, see ante § 105.
Accounting for sale or proceeds, see ante § 120.
Right of defrauded vendor to proceeds of mortgage sale, see post ¶ 526.

¶ 497. Moneys received upon foreclosure of a chattel mortgage are rightly applied first in payment of the debts alone secured by the mortgage, and second upon debts otherwise secured.—Schloss v. Solomon, 97 Mich. 526.

¶ 498. The proceeds of sales by the mortgagee are to be treated as moneys collected to apply on the security, and do not belong to the mortgagee beyond the extent of his lawful claim as a creditor.—Kohl v. Lynn, 34 Mich. 360.

¶ 499. Inasmuch as Comp. L. 1897, § 10315 expressly provide that mortgaged property levied on must be sold as a whole subject to the mortgage, where it sells for more than enough to pay the mortgage the balance belongs to judgment debtor.—Munger v. Sanford, 144 Mich. 323.

§ 135. Purchaser's title.

See also post ¶ 507.
Mortgagee as purchaser, see ante § 131.

¶ 500. Purchasers on a foreclosure of a chattel mortgage have the rights of mortgagees in possession, and cannot be sued in trover by any one who is precluded from attacking the mortgage or who shows no right to contest the possession.—Lyle v. Palmer, 42 Mich. 314.

¶ 501. If property covered by a chattel mortgage is held by the mortgagor under a conditional sale, and the mortgagee forecloses, the rights of the original vendor are not subjected to those of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale by reason of his agent's attending the sale and giving no notice of them.—Thirlby v. Rainbow, 93 Mich. 164.

¶ 502. The title to certain logs sold under a mortgage passed to the purchaser where it appeared that before an alleged conversion the mortgagee had sold a part of a mass of logs that had been commingled with other logs, and the joint agent of the purchaser and the mortgagee had taken possession of the entire mass for the purpose of sorting and delivering them "to the several parties entitled thereto," which act was authorized by the contract of sale.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 143 Mich. 514.

§ 136. ——Effect of irregularity or avoidance of proceedings.

Effect of bankruptcy on completed foreclosure and pending sale see Bankruptcy, ¶ 39.

¶ 503. The purchaser at an irregular or void mortgage sale gets only such rights as the mortgagee had.—Cavanaugh v. Sanderson, 152 Mich. 11.

¶ 504. Where plaintiff, a mortgagee, is entitled to possession, institutes a replevin suit, and gains the same, and proceeds to a foreclosure sale, without waiting for the result of an appeal of the replevin suit, the purchaser at the sale gains a good title despite the fact that the replevin suit is quashed on appeal.—Cavanaugh v. Sanderson, 152 Mich. 11.

¶ 505. Trover does not lie for a mere irregularity in a foreclosure sale made in good faith by a chattel mortgagee.—Rose v. Page, 82 Mich. 105.

¶ 506. An irregular foreclosure sale where the mortgagee bids in and retains the property does not extinguish the debt or render the mortgagee liable as for a conversion.—Brown v. Mynard, 107 Mich. 401.

¶ 507. A valid mortgage is not extinguished by an irregular sale, but the purchaser succeeds to the rights of the mortgagee.—Kelsey v. Ming, 118 Mich. 438.

¶ 508. An invalid sale by a mortgagee of chattels to foreclose does not constitute a conversion where he bids in the goods and holds them.—Brown v. Mynard, 107 Mich. 401.

¶ 509. A sale in June of mortgaged goods, chiefly fur garments, for a sum somewhat less than half the amount at which the goods were appraised when the mortgage was given, is not to be disturbed as made for an inadequate price, it being common knowledge that when such garments are out of style their value is greatly depreciated.—Union Nat. Bank v. Rich, 116 Mich. 414.

¶ 511. A sale of a stock of goods under a chattel mortgage given by a surviving partner, was set aside upon a bill filed by the administratrix of the estate of the deceased partner, where the auctioneer was also the agent of the buyer who was the surviving partner's wife, and where the sale was made subject to indefinite claims for exemption, which tended to dissuade bidders, and amount realized was below 60 to 75 cents on the dollar, a normal price on such sales.—Smitton v. Seibert, 136 Mich. 410.

¶ 512. Where a mortgagee of chattels sells them in good faith the mortgagor's remedy for a mere irregularity is by bill to redeem or by assumpsit to recover surplus, not by action in tort for the value of goods.—Rose v. Page, 82 Mich. 105.

¶ 513. Assumpsit will lie to recover the value of goods purchased by a chattel mortgagee in possession at a public sale held to be void for unfairness and lack of proper notice.—Castner v. Darby, 128 Mich. 241.

¶ 514. Where a mortgagee removed certain logs for the purpose of sale at an improper and unseasonable time of the year and in an improper manner, and neglected for an unreasonable time to sell them, he cannot be said to be guilty of a conversion where he had rightfully acquired possession after default, but he is liable in damages therefor.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 143 Mich. 514.

¶ 515. A mortgagee of chattels who sells them before condition broken is liable in trover for not restoring them upon a proper tender of the amount due.—Ealow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500.

¶ 516. Trover lies without demand or tender against a chattel mortgagee in possession who, having sold enough of the goods to satisfy his claim, denies plaintiff's title to the rest.—Iler v. Baker, 82 Mich. 226.

¶ 517. Where a mortgagee of chattels has obtained a bill of sale of them by fraud, a tender by the mortgagor of the amount due upon the mortgage, before bringing suit for conversion, is unnecessary.—Rall v. Cook, 77 Mich. 681.

¶ 518. In case of a foreclosure and sale under agreement of the mortgagor to receive the goods as consignee and sell for account of the mortgagees, thereby releasing the mortgage, the mortgagees would be liable to account to the mortgagor for any surplus remaining after satisfying their claim and the costs.—Norris, Allister & Co. v. Vosburgh, 98 Mich. 426.

¶ 519. The seller of a business under a contract in the nature of a chattel mortgage, who takes possession and sells the goods, himself becoming the purchaser, at a time when the vendee was not in default, held required to account to the latter for cash on hand at the time of such seizure, and money collected belonging to the vendee, as well as for goods originally belonging to the latter, which were included as additional security, and sold under the mortgage.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

¶ 520. Creditors who levy subject to a mortgage are in position to require the mortgagee to pursue the methods prescribed in the mortgage as to the mode of sale and the disposition of the proceeds.—Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 521. Where, pending chancery foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, replevin was brought against the mortgagee by a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor, it was held that the validity of the mortgage as a lien on the property intended by it in defendant's hands belonged to the court of chancery, and plaintiff could only recover, if at all, by showing that the property he claimed was not within the mortgage.—Austin v. French, 36 Mich. 199.

¶ 522. Under a bill by the administrator of a deceased partner to set aside a chattel mortgage sale under bill framed so as to ask complete relief, a resale was ordered, a receiver was directed to be appointed and the defendants were directed to be charged in the accounting with the amount received and credited with payments made including trustees' and attorneys' fees, and the remaining goods were ordered resold if ascertainable, and the proceeds turned over to the receiver for payment to creditors of the late partnership, and the defendant, wife of the surviving partner and mortgagor, was permitted to bid at a resale, there being no proof of bad faith but the first sale being irregular.—Smitton v. Seibert, 136 Mich. 410.

¶ 523. Purchasers subject to the equities of a chattel mortgagee in possession cannot divest such possession without redemption even if foreclosure has not been regular.—De Graff v. Byles, 63 Mich. 25.

¶ 524. Trover will not lie against purchasers on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage where plaintiff by privity to the mortgagor is precluded from attacking the mortgage, or has no right to contest the possession.—Lyle v. Palmer, 42 Mich. 314.

¶ 525. The right of a mortgagor of chattels to treat an irregular sale on foreclosure as a conversion by the mortgagee, and a payment of the debt to the extent of the value of the goods, is not available to a creditor of the mortgagor under an attachment on other property, for the purpose of defeating or reducing the claim of the mortgagee as against the attached property, in the absence of an assignment of such right from the mortgagor.—Brown v. Mynard, 107 Mich. 401.

¶ 526. The rights of a defrauded vendor must be settled in equity as to the proceeds of a mortgage sale foreclosed by a subsequent mortgagee without notice of the fraud, whose mortgage secured previous debts and new advances.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 527. A vendor entitled to rescind a sale for fraud on the vendee's part may recover in trover against a mortgagee whose mortgage was given to secure a pre-existing debt. —Edson v. Hudson, 83 Mich. 450.

¶ 528. One who has a right to replevy mortgaged goods then being foreclosed, in which foreclosure suit a receiver has been appointed without his consent, cannot be relegated to an action of trover with the possibility of recovering only the net proceeds after taking out the expenses of the receivership.—Merchants' and Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 Mich. 292.

§ 140. Estoppel to question sale.

Estoppel of mortgagor's privy to bring conversion against purchaser at foreclosure, see ante ¶ 524.

¶ 529. The fact that a mortgagor of chattels was present at the mortgage sale thereof without objecting does not estop him, as against the mortgagee, or the mortgagee's assignee, from contesting the sale on the ground that the indebtedness covered by the mortgage was usury though it might as against a purchaser who relied upon his silence.—Canning v. Harlan, 50 Mich. 320.

¶ 530. A mortgagor who, being present at a foreclosure sale of the mortgaged chattels, does not raise objection to the sale for irregularities such as selling in a lump distinct and different articles covered respectively by different mortgages, and not having the goods all present in view at the sale, may reasonably be said to be estopped from questioning the sale.—Brown v. Mynard, 107 Mich. 401.

¶ 531. Complainant bank always understood and claimed that in a certain chattel mortgage to it by a corporation, the after-acquired property of the corporation was included. The language did not in fact so include it. Complainant foreclosed the mortgage, took possession of the after-acquired property from the mortgagor, advertised and sold it, no creditor objecting. Held, that after this the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation came in too late to claim said property for creditors.—Marine Sav. Bank v. Norton, 160 Mich. 614.

Allowance of amount realized from goods in action on note, see ante ¶ 489.

Commencement of suit upon debt secured as waiver of forfeiture, see ante § 122.

¶ 532. Where the undertaking of the makers of a chattel mortgage note is for the absolute payment of the secured debt, it is not necessary that the mortgagee should exhaust his security before bringing suit upon the note.—Cole v. Shaw, 103 Mich. 505.

§ 142. Suit on mortgaged choses in action.

¶ 533. A chattel mortgagor may maintain an action on an account covered by the mortgage if he is not in default, where the mortgage provides that until default he may keep and use the mortgaged property in the regular course of his business.—Swan v. Thurman, 112 Mich. 416.

§ 143. Torts by third persons.

Conversion by taking goods with notice that after-acquired clause covers them, see also ante ¶ 186.

Action against officer for levy and sale, see also ante § 77.

Evidence of notice in suit by mortgagee for conversion of mortgaged property by third person, see ante ¶ 255.

¶ 534. A mortgagee of chattels not being the owner of the goods cannot recover in assumpsit for their value if they are seized or converted, nor for the amount received for them if they are converted and sold. —Randall v. Higbee, 37 Mich. 40; Carpenter v. Graham, 42 Mich. 191; Carpenter v. Graham, 46 Mich. 531; Warner v. Beebe, 47 Mich. 435.

¶ 535. The mortgagee may maintain trespass, trover or replevin for any intermeddling with property by third party.—Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Grove v. Wise, 89 Mich. 161.

¶ 536. A mortgagee of chattels may bring trover for the conversion of them by an attaching creditor.—Canfield v. W. J. Gould & Co., 115 Mich. 461.

¶ 537. A mortgagee of chattels, whether in or out of possession, may sue for any unlawful damage done to his security, without previously looking to the personal responsibility of his debtor, or showing the latter's insolvency, for the legal value of such a security is the means it furnishes the mortgagee of obtaining satisfaction of the mortgage debt out of the property.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530.

¶ 538. A mortgagee, whose property has been wrongfully disposed of under an execution sale, need not pursue the purchaser and recover the goods but may sue the sheriff for the conversion.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530.

¶ 539. That the mortgagee has assigned the mortgage as collateral security for a debt does not affect his right to recover against an officer who has attached and sold the property, if before suit the assignee has surrendered the mortgage to him.—Eddy v. McCall, 77 Mich. 242.

¶ 540. Any parol understanding between mortgagor and mortgagee regarding the possession of the mortgaged chattels could afford third parties who had unlawfully converted the property no protection against the mortgagee's action of trover.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 541. A vendee and mortgagor permitted by the vendor and mortgagee to remain in possession of the chattels sold and mortgaged may maintain trover for their value against a trespasser, and the latter cannot defend by showing that the mortgagee has the right of possession.—Parkhurst v. Jacobs, 17 Mich. 302.

¶ 542. A second mortgagee cannot maintain trover against his mortgagor's attaching creditor who took the goods from the first mortgagee, unless the latter has waived his rights and unless the second mortgagee has become subrogated thereto.—McGraw v. Sampliner, 107 Mich. 141.

¶ 543. A second mortgagee may, without paying or tendering payment of a judgment previously recovered against defendant for a conversion of the first mortgagee's interest, maintain trover against one who has wrongfully converted the goods.—Huellmantel v. Vinton, 116 Mich. 621.

¶ 544. Where chattels owned by one partner, but used by the firm without being converted into partnership assets, were mortgaged by the other partner without the owner's knowledge, and were sold by the mortgagee under the mortgage, a former mortgagee from the owner can maintain trover against the latter mortgagee for their conversion.—Cutler v. Hake, 47 Mich. 80.

§ 144. ——Before condition broken.

Conversion by first mortgagee of second mortgagee's interest in the property, see ante § 117.

¶ 545. Even before condition broken, a mortgagee whose right of possession is wrongfully interfered with may maintain trover.—Wright v. Starks, 77 Mich. 221.

¶ 546. Even before condition broken a mortgagee of chattels entitled under his mortgage to the possession thereof can maintain trover for their conversion.—Grove v. Wise, 39 Mich. 161.

¶ 547. Chattel mortgagees whose mortgage provides that they may take possession whenever they consider their claim in jeopardy may, even before condition broken, bring trover against an attaching creditor who refuses their demand for possession.—McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

¶ 548. The mortgagee of chattels may, even before condition broken, maintain trover against any person wrongfully interfering with his right of possession, at which time demand made for possession of the chattels is sufficient.—Wright v. Starks, 77 Mich. 221.

§ 145. Rights of comortgagee or comortgagor.

Right of foreclosure, see ante § 123.

¶ 549. Where a chattel mortgage is given to secure the claims of several creditors, who are named as mortgagees, and whose claims are further evidenced by the accompanying notes of the mortgagor, one of said creditors may proceed to collect his debt by a foreclosure of the mortgage, or may protect himself by seizing the property, if in danger of destruction or loss, without joining the remaining mortgagees as plaintiffs, which he would have no right to do without their consent, and he will hold possession of the property subject to the rights of his comortgagees.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 550. A first and second mortgagee, when priority has been waived between them, may jointly bring trespass for interference with the goods.—Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

§ 146. Rights of trust mortgagee.

See also ante ¶¶ 365, 367.

Assignment to one of creditors secured, see ante ¶ 376.

Accounting for proceeds of sale, see ante § 120.

¶ 551. One who takes a mortgage as security for his own debt and for notes indorsed by him becomes a trustee of the mortgaged property for the benefit of the holders of and sureties upon the notes, and where other creditors attach the property the mortgagee is entitled to recover to the full amount of the mortgage, less what was paid before the seizure.—Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653.

I. CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM.

§ 1. In general; strictness of procedure.

Grounds for capias see post §§ 4-6.
The affidavit, see post §§ 7-11.
The writ, see post §§ 12-14.
Nature and extent of liability on bonds see post §§ 49, 50.
Surrender of principal and exoneration of sureties, see post §§ 51-53.
Liability of sureties as strictissimi juris, see post § 57.

¶ 1. No suit can be commenced by capias, or after arrest be carried to judgment, except in compliance with statute.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

§ 2. Immunities and privileges from arrest.

Immunity of woman from being held to bail, see post § 16.
Quashal of writ because arrest was in violation of privilege of arrested person, see post § 18.

¶ 2. Comp. L. 1871, § 6119 (see How. St. § 7704), prohibiting the imprisonment of females on process in civil actions, was meant to declare the settled policy of the state, and any later act providing for imprisonment on civil process will be considered as passed with reference to this policy and as not applying to females; so held of Comp. L. 1871, § 2143, authorizing suits under the prohibitory liquor law to be begun by capias. —People ex rel. Strickland v. Bartow, 27 Mich. 68.

¶ 3. The common-law privilege from arrest does not extend to the seller of a boat who comes into a jurisdiction to conclude the sale and to clear up a suit against the boat for supplies.—Monroe v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 283.

¶ 4. Comp. L. 1897, § 10157, relating to the privilege of witness or suitors from arrest, does not cover the case of a seller of a boat who comes into a jurisdiction to conclude the sale and to clear up a suit against the boat for supplies.—Monroe v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 283.

¶ 5. Bastardy proceedings, though special and statutory, are nevertheless so far criminal proceedings that a person is not privileged from arrest on a charge of bastardy while he is in the state only for the purpose of furnishing special bail in an action in which he was arrested upon a writ of capias ad respondendum.—Cady v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 618.

§ 3. Liability to second arrest.

After discharge as poor debtor, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLIII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13628.

¶ 6. An arrest in a civil action, and a subsequent discharge at the instance of the party procuring the same, does not render one exempt from a second arrest for the same cause of action, where the circumstances show a want of malice and of attempt to oppress.—Breckton v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 615.

§ 4. Grounds and causes for capias.

Necessity of setting forth in affidavit, see post § 7.

Objections to writ for want of grounds or for other cause, see post § 18.

Common-law rule that capias ad satisfaciendum could issue only where capias ad respondendum might, see post § 37.

Constitutional provision relating to imprisonment for debt, see also Constitutional Law, VIII.

Provisions of statute, see Jud. Act, Chap. XIII, §§ 11, 12; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12414, 12415.

In actions before justices, see Jud. Act, Chap. LXXII §§ 1, 2; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14324, 14325.

¶ 7. Since imprisonment for debt has been abolished, the mere existence of a cause of action does not show the propriety of a capias.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 8. Seduction, through promise of marriage, is fraud; and where it is averred in the affidavit, the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt on contract, except in cases of fraud, breach of trust, etc., will not prevent an arrest on a capias in an action for breach of promise to marry.—In re Sheahan, 25 Mich. 145.

¶ 9. Arrest on capias is permitted in an action on the case for fraud.—People ex rel. Cohn v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 40 Mich. 169.

¶ 10. Where a prima facie case is made out by an affidavit in an action of trover a writ of capias ad respondendum will lie under Comp. L. 1897, § 9008 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12661).—Timm v. Cass Circuit Judge, 192 Mich. 508.

§ 5. ——Actions on contract.

¶ 11. An action on contract can be begun by capias only in some of the cases specified in Comp. L. 1857, § 4119, How. St., § 7302.—People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215.

¶ 12. A claim against a railroad superintendent for moneys belonging to the company which he had collected, and failed, on demand, to account for, is one "arising upon contract" within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 5734, How. St., § 7302; but the cause of action not being one of those enumerated as authorized to be begun by capias, the writ and arrest, upon an affidavit setting forth such facts, are illegal.—In re Stephenson, 32 Mich. 60.

¶ 13. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9008, a proceeding by capias ad respondendum is justified where the defendant received money on Monday upon false pretenses made on Sunday even though the plaintiff agreed on Sunday to send the money.—Clark v. Kent Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 449.

§ 6. ——"Professional employment."

Sufficiency of affidavit, see post § 7.

¶ 14. The term "office or professional employment," used in the Non-imprisonment Act (How. St., § 7302), does not include a mere agency to establish a claim.—Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38.

¶ 15. The term "office or professional employment," as used in the Non-imprisonment Act (How. St., § 7302), does not include an agency for the sale of sewing machines.—People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215.

¶ 16. The term "professional employment," as contemplated by Comp. L. 1871, § 5734 (How. St., § 7302), cannot be applied to the business of a real estate agent.—Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 153.

¶ 17. A suit by capias is a civil remedy, and the writ cannot issue under Comp. L. 1871, § 5734; How. St., § 7302, in actions for damages for misconduct or neglect in office or professional employment, unless under conditions applicable to contracts.—Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 153.

§ 7. Affidavit for capias.

Affidavit to hold to bail, see post § 15.

Affidavits under Fraudulent Debtor Act, see post §§ 26-33.

Application for warrant for arrest of fraudulent debtor, see post § 25.

Annexation of affidavit to the writ, see post § 13.

Necessity that averments be on personal knowledge and not hearsay or conclusions, see post § 11.
Objections to affidavit for writ, see post § 18.
Liability of sureties as measured by capias, see post § 49.
Departure of declaration on bail bond from affidavit, see post § 62.
Affidavit before justices, see Jud. Act, Chap. LXXII, §§ 1-3; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14324-14326.

¶ 18. The affidavit being the basis for a capias under Comp. L. 1871, § 5734; How. St., § 7302, if it fails to set forth a case within the statute the arrest is illegal, and giving bail and pleading to the action will not confer jurisdiction.—In re Stephenson, 32 Mich. 60.

¶ 19. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum, or for any writ that will deprive one of his liberty, must set forth in detail the facts and circumstances on which it rests and not merely inferences; and the facts must be within deponent's personal knowledge.—Soule v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 175 Mich. 127.

¶ 20. Where the affiant in an affidavit for a capias ad respondendum charging fraudulent representations as to the value of real estate, states that the facts are within his personal knowledge, and where the fact stated is one with which any witness might personally be familiar, and is one to which an ordinary witness might testify and is one on which the testimony of an expert is not necessary, the court will not add to the statutory requirement, and the things going to determine the weight of the statement need not be stated in detail.—Pratt v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 558.

¶ 21. Arrest on a civil capias, issued upon an affidavit charging simply a breach of promise to marry, is unlawful.—In re Tyson, 32 Mich. 262.

¶ 22. A general allegation in an affidavit for arrest that the defendant received certain moneys as agent on the sale of property for the plaintiff, and has a balance in his hands which he refuses to account for, and has fraudulently converted to his own use, is not sufficient to justify a capias.—People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215.

¶ 23. An affidavit for a capias stated facts to the effect that defendant, having mortgaged certain chattels, and knowing that the first mortgage was not on file, made a second with the design of supplanting the first. Held, that the property so taken out from the operation of the first mortgage was wrongfully converted; that an action of tort would lie, and that the affidavit justified the mortgagor's arrest.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 280.

¶ 24. An affidavit for a capias which clearly charges an unlawful conversion of the property of the plaintiffs is not objectionable for insufficiency.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 25. The affidavit for arrest is prima facie sufficient if it tends to show that the defendant had bought goods without intending to pay for them and knowing himself to be insolvent at the time, or fraudulently intending to give his affairs the appearance of solvency.—People ex rel. Watson v. Superior Court Judge, 40 Mich. 729.

¶ 26. The affidavit for a capias suffices if it positively states that defendant obtained goods from plaintiff by means of representations which are set forth and stated to be false as of affiant's knowledge.—Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181.

¶ 27. An affidavit for a capias for assault is sufficient if it states facts that would make a prima facie case on a criminal trial.—Pease v. Pendell, 57 Mich. 315.

¶ 28. Statements in an affidavit for a capias that defendant, when he made certain representations as to his financial condition, was not worth enough to pay his debts, and was insolvent, and held his property subject to mortgages which, as deponent believed, would be the full value of his property, are too indefinite to amount to legal proof.—Sheridan v. Briggs, 53 Mich. 569.

¶ 29. An affidavit for capias need not particularize the damages for which suit is brought; it is enough if it states the facts constituting the cause of action. In an action on the bail bond the particulars of damage may be set forth in the declaration.—Cumer v. Moyer, 57 Mich. 375.

¶ 30. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum alleging that the plaintiffs sent a note for $700 for collection and the defendant received $100 in cash and a new note payable to himself for $600 and refused to deliver either, shows unlawful conversion sufficient to support the action.—Clark v. Kent Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 449.

¶ 31. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum which alleges that the defendant is a broker and dealer on commission in stocks, etc., that the plaintiffs contracted to furnish market quotations to him does not show a gambling contract under Comp. L. 1897, § 11373.—Clark v. Kent Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 449.

¶ 32. An affidavit in support of a writ of capias ad respondendum is sufficient where it alleges that the defendants in an exchange of land represented to the deponent that they owned an equity in the land by virtue of a land contract, that they were in possession and collecting $15 per month rent, that the defendants relied upon these representations, but subsequently found that the rights of the defendant had been forfeited and annulled and the property taken away from them prior to the transfer, that they had no right, title or interest, were not in possession, were collecting no rent, that they refused to make a reconveyance and that the deponent's damages were $1,000.00.—McLeod v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 344.

¶ 34. An affidavit accompanying an application for a writ of capias ad respondendum alleged that one Ord, deponent's agent, had had consigned to him a large quantity of wheelbarrows to sell; that he disposed of a large number of these, and failed to remit monthly as required; that he admitted there were outstanding accounts to the extent of two hundred dollars due from purchasers, and agreed to furnish a list of them, and let deponent collect the money; and that he failed to do so and collected and appropriated the money himself. Held, mandamus by Ord, the relator, would not lie to order the lower court to quash the writ on the ground that the affidavit did not set forth sufficient specific facts.—Ord v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 160 Mich. 569.

¶ 35. An allegation in an affidavit that the defendant secretly converted apples and that the records of the railroad show that defendant shipped them without reporting such shipments to plaintiff, is not a sufficient allegation of the fact that the apples were shipped fraudulently without plaintiff's consent, so as to sustain a writ of capias ad respondendum.—H. J. Cheney Co. v. Allgeo, 165 Mich. 384.

¶ 36. Affidavits in support of a capias ad respondendum averring the receipt by defendant by mistake of a check intended for another, of the cashing of same by him, his admission that the money did not belong to him, his appropriation of the proceeds to his own use, and his refusal to pay same to the plaintiff, held to state a cause of action sounding in tort based on personal knowledge.—Tidey v. Kent Circuit Judge, 179 Mich. 580.

¶ 37. A writ of capias may issue on a showing in substance that the defendant by false and fraudulent representations, on which he knew the plaintiff relied, as to the character, value and nature of the land and buildings owned by him, induced the plaintiff to exchange her property therefor.—Merlau v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 393.

¶ 38. In an action to recover damages for false imprisonment against a sheriff who served a writ of capias ad respondendum and a person making affidavit for the writ as agent of another on the ground that defendants were responsible for plaintiff's unlawful arrest under a defective writ, held that although the affidavit was technically defective, the facts set out were upon personal knowledge, disclosed actionable misconduct on the part of plaintiff and a cause of action proper to be commenced by capias, and furnished protection to the defendants.—Thomas v. Rosecrantz, 193 Mich. 357.

¶ 39. An affidavit, upon which a writ of capias is based and issued, setting up an alleged agreement for the purchase of wood by the deponent, that the deponent agreed to accept and did accept a draft for a specified sum as an advance on the wood on condition that the wood should be delivered promptly, and that the seller delivered no wood at all and refused to see the deponent, and that the deponent has a good cause of action against the seller for the amount of the draft paid, discloses a cause of action based upon contract, and hence the writ will be quashed on motion.—Welsh v. McKerral, How. N. P. 12.

¶ 40. An affidavit for a capias spoke of the defendant as being "of the city of Niles," which is in Berrien county. Held, that this was not such an averment of residence as would preclude plaintiff from showing in justification of a capias issued in Cass county that defendant actually resided in Cass county.—Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181.

§ 8. ——Joinder and misjoinder of causes.

¶ 41. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum concluding "the plaintiffs have a good cause of action in an action of trespass on the case, and for fraud and breach of trust arising by contract, express and implied" does not constitute a misjoinder where the body of the affidavit discloses an action for money paid to the plaintiff's use and an action for unlawful conversion of other funds.—Clark v. Kent Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 449.

§ 9. Title and caption of affidavit.

In general, see Affidavits.

¶ 42. An affidavit for a capias need not be entitled in the cause. Strictly speaking no cause is pending when the affidavit is made.—Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181.

§ 10. Competency of affiant.

Personal knowledge of affiant, see post § 11.

¶ 43. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum must contain allegations which the affiant can competently testify to upon the trial, and the writ should be quashed where the affiant charges the negligent performance of a surgical operation on the affiant's wife, and contains nothing indicating the affiant's medical knowledge or qualification to testify to the fact.—Church v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 126.

¶ 44. A capias in action by a husband against defendant for stupefying his wife with drink and having intercourse with her in that helpless condition may be issued on the affidavit of the wife to those facts, since they constitute rape, if true, and not adultery with defendant of which she would be incompetent to testify.—Hirdes v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 321.

Quashal for want of personal knowledge of affiant, see post § 18.
Affidavits to hold to bail, see post ¶ 71.
In affidavit for arrest under Fraudulent Debtor Act, see post § 31.

¶ 45. An affidavit for a capias, or for any writ that will deprive one of his liberty, must set forth in detail the facts and circumstances on which it rests, and not merely inferences and conclusions from such facts, and the facts must be within deponent's personal knowledge.—People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215; People ex. rel. Hackett v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 36 Mich. 334; Sheridan v. Briggs, 53 Mich. 569.

¶ 46. An affidavit for the writ of capias ad respondendum is insufficient where the statements therein are made on hearsay only.—Gardiner v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 414.

¶ 47. If an affidavit for a capias ad respondendum to arrest a defendant sued for slander is based on hearsay matters, it is faulty, and if an affidavit on a motion to quash the proceedings does not admit the truth of the hearsay affidavit, the Supreme Court will issue a writ of mandamus directing the lower court to quash the proceedings.—Martin v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 22.

¶ 48. Where an affidavit for a writ of capias ad respondendum states that defendant mailed slanderous letters through the mails, and that the persons addressed received them, and there is no statement that affiant saw the letters mailed or received, and there is no affidavit by any of the recipients, such affidavit is hearsay and fatally defective.—Soule v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 175 Mich. 127.

¶ 49. A writ of capias ad respondendum should be quashed where the affidavit attached thereto states that plaintiff was induced to complete a trade and accept a note by fraudulent representations made by defendant as to his financial responsibility and that of his surety, that plaintiff has ascertained that defendant and his surety did not own property as represented and that the surety does not now own such property and defendant admits that he now has nothing, since such statements are not statements of personal knowledge.—Rice v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 322.

¶ 50. An affidavit by an agent and attorney of the owner for a writ of capias ad respondendum for the unlawful cutting of timber must show that the facts of want of consent of the owner are within the personal knowledge of deponent, or must set forth in detail the facts and circumstances which are the basis of his conclusions.—Shaw v. Ashford, 110 Mich. 534.

¶ 51. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum was based upon affiant's personal knowledge in the ordinary meaning of its language, when it alleged among other things, that on a given day defendant said of and concerning deponent, you (meaning deponent) stole my wheel; and that the defendant stated to the police officer, "That woman (meaning deponent) stole my wheel and I want her locked up," and that thereupon defendant then and there maliciously caused and procured deponent to be arrested, etc.—Wright v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 499.

¶ 52. An affidavit for a capias ad respondendum must state facts and not conclusions of the affiant; and where the most important fact attempted to be stated, the debauching of the affiant's wife is manifestly an inference from facts and circumstances not disclosed in the affidavit, as appears from the affidavit stating that "said actions and doings took place at the said village of Lawton and at other places in said county unknown to this deponent," such affidavit is defective and insufficient to justify the issuance of the writ.—Conrad v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 492.

¶ 53. An affidavit for a capias in an action for fraud based on false representations, setting out alleged representations in detail, and that they were made by defendant to plaintiff personally, is sufficient, though the falsity of some is not stated on the personal knowledge of plaintiff, where the falsity of sufficient of them is so made to appear as to authorize the issuance of the writ.—Muir v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 151 Mich. 117.

¶ 54. The general rule that affidavit for a capias must aver in terms that the facts stated are true to the personal knowledge of the affiant, has an exception where the facts are evidenced by record showing a wrongful act but there is no one who can testify personally to the making of the record or to the truth of the entries found therein, and the affiant supports his affidavit by certified copies of such records.—Robinson v. Branch Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 70.

¶ 55. It is unimportant that a capias purports to be in an action of trespass on the case, if the affidavit therefor recites facts sufficient to sustain it as a capias in trespass.—Pease v. Pendell, 57 Mich. 315.

¶ 56. A capias is not fatally defective for misstating the date of its return day where it also contains a recital showing that it is to be returned on the first day of the term.—Wonderly v. Kent Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 722.

¶ 57. A capias must be made returnable on the first day of term.—People ex rel. Whitney v. Kent Circuit Judge, 38 Mich. 308.

¶ 58. Under How. St., § 7306, giving the defendant in a capias ad respondendum 20 days after the return day for the entry of his appearance, and section 7295, providing what the form of the writ shall be and contemplating that it may be altered by rule of court, a writ made returnable within 15 days after service, and following the form prescribed by C. C. Rule 1, was not void.—Wright v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 499.

¶ 59. A writ of capias ad respondendum was issued August 16, 1906. On August 17, 1906, the affidavit was filed, the court indorsed the bail on the writ, and the same was served on the defendant in the proceeding. Held, the writ of capias ad respondendum was not prematurely issued, and therefore void, because dated one day before the affidavit and the indorsement of bail, since the writ was not operative until bail was indorsed.—People ex rel. McCallum v. Gebhardt, 154 Mich. 504.

§ 13. Annexation of papers to writ.

Service with writ in execution of same, see post § 14.

¶ 60. How. St., § 7305, which provides that the order to hold to bail shall be made only upon the affidavit of plaintiff, or some person in his behalf, showing the nature of plaintiff's claim, which affidavit shall be annexed to the writ, does not require that authenticated copies of judicial proceedings, or documentary evidence of facts within plaintiff's own knowledge, be attached.—Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 61. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 9996 and 9999, do not require an affidavit attached to a writ of capias ad respondendum to bear the same date as the writ.—Clark v. Kent Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 449.

Writ from justice, see Jud. Act, Chap. LXXII, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 14328.

¶ 62. Service of a writ of capias ad respondendum is defective where the sheriff merely arrests the defendant and keeps him in custody, when the statute in force (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 168) requires the officer making the arrest to also "serve a copy of the writ, and of the affidavit or affidavits upon which said writ is founded, upon said defendant," but the fact that the officer or attorney did not know of the later statute, does not operate to render the service fatally defective, or to deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed with the case, as the statute in question requiring service of copies of the writ, is directory merely, the failure to serve such copies does not prejudice the defendant, and the objection is technical.—Pixley v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 121 Mich. 629.

§ 15. Affidavit to hold to bail.

Annexation to the writ, see ante § 13.
Sufficiency of affidavit for capias, see ante § 7 et seq.

Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XIII, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 12416.

¶ 63. An affidavit to hold to bail must be of the same legal quality as evidence, as would be required at the trial to establish the facts relied on as the ground of arrest. —Sheridan v. Briggs, 53 Mich. 569.

¶ 64. In an affidavit under How. St., § 7305, for an order for bail required by section 7304, to be indorsed on capias, plaintiff need only set forth the nature of his claim, and the circuit judge judicially determines whether the case comes within the exceptions of the statute, and whether it warrants the indorsement and issuance of the writ.—Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1.

¶ 65. Whether an affidavit that does not state that plaintiff has suffered damage will warrant holding defendant to bail on a capias, quæere.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

¶ 66. An affidavit under How. St., § 7305, for an order for bail on capias, was uncertain and insufficient where it charged fraud and intent to embezzle and convert money as agent but set forth no facts indicating fraud or breach of trust.—Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1.

¶ 67. An affidavit to hold to bail in an action for libel, after setting forth, as the libel complained of a privileged writing, to wit, the making by defendant of a complaint before a justice of the peace charging plaintiff with larceny, contained the further averment that defendant afterwards, in divers places in a designated village, and to divers people, repeated the same slanderous words and charges. Held, that, if this latter averment was intended also to cover an action for slander, it was not sufficient, being too indefinite, and not purporting to be based upon the personal knowledge of the affiant. —Graham v. Cass Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 425.

¶ 68. Where an affidavit to hold to bail sufficiently shows defendant's connection with plaintiff's arrest and imprisonment, and also shows that such arrest was based upon an affidavit that did not give jurisdiction to the justice, it states a case of false imprisonment. —Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 69. The fact that the affidavit to hold to bail fails to negative the averment in the affidavit for arrest that suit had been commenced before the justice of the peace for the recovery of the alleged debt is immaterial, where said affidavit states sufficient other facts to warrant the issue of the capias. —Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 70. It is not material that affidavit to hold to bail fails to deny that plaintiff was indebted to defendant; plaintiff's right to maintain his suit not being dependent upon whether he was so indebted.—Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 71. An affidavit to hold to bail in a suit for malicious prosecution of the affiant under the fraudulent debtor's act cannot be held to have been made without affiant's personal knowledge where, after averring as upon such knowledge the making of the affidavit upon which the warrant of arrest issued, it sets forth that affidavit in full, and avers service upon the affiant of a certified copy thereof by the officer who made the arrest.—Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 72. A woman could not be held to bail upon a capias issued under the penal section of the prohibitory liquor law (Comp. L. 1871, § 2138), since it is a civil action and such imprisonment is forbidden by chapter 192, § 45.—People ex rel. Strickland v. Bartow, 27 Mich. 68.

¶ 73. There is a fixing and an indorsement of bail on a writ of capias ad respondendum by the "judge of the court from which the writ issues" within Comp. L. 1897, § 9998 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12661), where the judge fixes and indorses the bail in a county in his judicial district other than that in which a suit was instituted.—Timm v. Cass Circuit Judge, 192 Mich. 508.

§ 17. Order for appearance.

¶ 74. Where, on defendant's motion, an order to hold to bail is vacated, it is within the discretion of the circuit judge, as a part of the order vacating it, to require defendant to enter his appearance in the cause.—People ex rel. Randall v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 36 Mich. 500.

¶ 74a. The appearance of a defendant by putting in bail upon a capias ad respondendum is a waiver of any insufficiency in the affidavit for the writ.—Stewart v. Hill, 1 Mich. 265.

¶ 75. After pleading and going to trial in an action begun by capias, defendant cannot insist on objections to the sufficiency of the affidavit for the writ or for bail.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187; Wasey v. Mahoney, 55 Mich. 194; Wiest v. Luyendyk, 73 Mich. 661; Reed v. McCready, 170 Mich. 532.

¶ 75a. By pleading the general issue and going to trial without objection defendant waives objections to a defective affidavit for a civil warrant in justice's court.—Jacklin v. Soutier, 82 Mich. 648.

¶ 76. Pleading to the merits does not waive the defects in an affidavit for the arrest of the defendant, if he has already moved to quash the proceedings and the motion has been denied.—Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300.

¶ 77. Irregularities or errors in a civil capias, however serious, cannot, if not jurisdictional, be attacked collaterally, and may be waived by a failure to take advantage of them in time, so as not to be open to objection even in a direct proceeding to review the judgment.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶ 77a. A defendant in the county court who, after arrest, applied for and obtained an adjournment, was too late to object to irregularities in the preliminary proceedings on the adjourned day.—Stewart v. Hill, 1 Mich. 265.

¶ 77b. Jurisdictional defects in an affidavit for a capias are not waived by putting in special bail and pleading in a cause.—In re Stephenson, 32 Mich. 60.

(1 Mich. Dig. 60)

¶ 77c. After putting in and perfecting special bail and entering appearance, defendant cannot object that the affidavit to hold to bail was insufficient to confer jurisdiction to issue the writ or to make the order holding to bail.—Graham v. Cass Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 425.

¶ 78. Where the allegations of fraud in an affidavit for a capias ad respondendum are hearsay, mandamus will not lie to vacate an order quashing the writ for insufficiency.—Moyle v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 636.

¶ 79. A writ of capias ad respondendum is properly quashed where the material allegations in the affidavit were not made upon the personal knowledge of the affiant and are indefinite, uncertain and general.—Northrop v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 128 Mich. 415.

¶ 80. One Teeter was brought from another state into Michigan on a charge of wife abandonment. Immediately after being freed from jail, he was arrested on a capias by relator in a civil suit. Held, mandamus would not lie to compel the respondent judge to vacate his order quashing the capias, since the prisoner was entitled to a reasonable time to leave the state before being subject to arrest.—Weale v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 158 Mich. 563.

¶ 81. In an action on a claim, the defense that it was purchased by plaintiff, an attorney, for the purpose of bringing suit in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 1135, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 12553, cannot be raised in a preliminary proceeding on a motion to quash a writ of capias ad respondendum.—Tidey v. Kent Circuit Judge, 179 Mich. 580.

¶ 83. In quashing a writ of capias ad respondendum for insufficiency of affidavits, it is error for the trial court to make a final order so as to dismiss the entire cause and take away the right of plaintiff to proceed on the summons clause.—H. J. Cheney Co. v. Allgeo, 165 Mich. 384.

A. 1911, Act No. 233, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13140, must be given within 15 days from the date of the issuance of the writ.—Kirby v. Soule, 178 Mich. 406.

¶ 86. It is not necessary to a proceeding against a fraudulent debtor, except under the second clause of Comp. L. 1857, § 5390; How. St., § 8754, that the creditor intended to be defrauded should be shown to be a judgment creditor.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

¶ 87. A warrant issued after suit commenced by attachment is not made void by the fact that there is a pending levy under the attachment.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

§ 22. ——Fraud.

For capias ad respondendum, see also ante §§ 4-6.

¶ 88. Whether the fraudulent acts of a debtor occurring without the state can be made the basis of proceedings against him in this state under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act, quære, the court being equally divided.—Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472.

¶ 89. The Fraudulent Debtors' Act does not cover cases of mere constructive fraud nor apply to those who are guilty of no personal delinquency, and compel them to account for transactions of others which they cannot be presumed able to explain.—Watson v. Hinchman, 42 Mich. 27.

§ 23. Nature of proceedings.

¶ 90. Proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act are not of a criminal nature.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129; Wayne County v. Randall, 43 Mich. 137; Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

§ 24. Jurisdiction of proceedings.

¶ 91. Proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act can only be taken before the magistrate who has before him the civil proceedings to which they are collateral.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 92. The jurisdiction to issue the warrant of arrest does not depend on the weight of the evidence in the abstract, or on the conflicting opinions of different courts respecting its conclusiveness. A mistake of the justice in this regard may involve an error for correction, but his decision will be unassailable for defect of jurisdiction, and will stand good until reversed.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

§ 25. Application or complaint, and pleas or objections.

Affidavits against the proceedings, see post § 33.

¶ 93. A complaint that specified partners had disposed of their property with intent to defraud, and a finding that one of them had failed to account for the firm assets and to explain the doings of all, will not sustain a conviction of the individual partner under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act.—Watson v. Hinchman, 42 Mich. 27.

¶ 94. A plea in abatement in proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act, which averred that the justice before whom such proceedings were taken, was an attorney for certain parties who were plaintiffs in a replevin suit then pending in the circuit court, which involved the title to the same property complained of being fraudulently concealed by defendant in such fraudulent debtor proceedings, was sufficiently certain and, being admitted by demurrer, ousted jurisdiction. —Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 95. A plea in abatement to the proceeding is not waived, where, after being overruled on demurrer, the defendant pleads not guilty and files a sworn denial of fraud.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 96. An affidavit under the statute for the arrest of a person as a fraudulent debtor, must make out a prima facie case of fraud. —In re Teachout, 15 Mich. 346.

¶ 97. A reference to "chapter 141 of the Revised Statutes of this State," contained in the affidavit for arrest sufficiently designates the revision of 1846, as all other revisions are entitled "Compiled Laws" or Howell's Annotated Statutes."—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

§ 27. ——Sufficiency of facts.

As to fraud, debt or judgment, see also post §§ 28-30.

Review of sufficiency, see post § 36.

¶ 98. A warrant of arrest will not be void for want of jurisdiction if the affidavit has a legal tendency to make out a proper case in all its parts, though the proof which satisfies the magistrate is slight and inconclusive. —Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129; Supe v. Francis, 49 Mich. 266.

¶ 99. An affidavit for a warrant under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act is sufficient if it shows the demand on which it is issued to be in judgment, and that the defendant could not be arrested on it (see Comp. L. 1871, chap. 230).—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

§ 28. ——Averment as to fraud.

See also post ¶ 104.

¶ 100. The facts that a debtor has admitted that he has sold his stock and refuses to pay more than thirty cents on the dollar, and that the sale was made at less than half the value of the goods, are not in themselves sufficient to warrant his arrest. —Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 101. An affidavit which, after averring that the debtor is indebted to affiant in a certain sum, and that suit has been commenced before a certain justice of the peace, alleges that, as affiant has good reason to believe, and does believe, the debtor is about to remove his property out of the county where the affidavit is made, with intent to defraud his creditors,—that the facts and circumstances constituting the grounds of such belief are, that the debtor has lately received $608, as a pension, that he refuses to pay affiant any part of his claim, that he has sold some of his property, and openly declares he is about to remove from this state to Canada, is insufficient under How. St., § 8753.—Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42.

¶ 102. Affidavits are sufficient prima facie to authorize a warrant of arrest under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act where they set out in substance that the debtor had a stock of goods and sold it to his brother-in-law for $600, taking his promissory notes running for five years in payment, and that after plaintiff's execution was issued he was asked to apply such notes upon the debt, but refused to do so, since an inference of fraud or unjust refusal to apply the notes upon the judgment may be drawn from the facts so stated.—Wm. Barie Dry Goods Co. v. Casler, 131 Mich. 23.

§ 29. ——Averment as to debt.

¶ 103. An affidavit for commitment as a fraudulent debtor is insufficient if it does not set forth, except by way of recital, that the respondent is indebted to the parties instituting the proceeding.—In re Lee, 49 Mich. 629.

¶ 104. Affidavits for the arrest of defendant as a fraudulent debtor have a legal tendency to support the warrant therefor if they show that he is indebted to the plaintiff in a specified sum and that affiant has reason to believe and does believe that he has disposed of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, and further shows that he has executed a bill of sale of all his goods with the avowed purpose of preventing a creditor from enforcing his claim against him and received no consideration for the transfer. —Supe v. Francis, 49 Mich. 266.

¶ 105. An allegation in the affidavit for arrest that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum upon two promissory notes sufficiently shows the character and amount of the indebtedness, within the requirement of How. St., chap. 304, § 4.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

§ 30. ——Averment as to judgment.

¶ 106. The affidavit is sufficient if it shows the demand on which it is issued to be in judgment, and that the defendant could not be arrested on it.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

¶ 107. Where the claim for which a warrant under Comp. L. 1871, § 7176; How. St., § 8754, is issued is alleged to be in judgment, the affidavit for the warrant must set forth such a judgment as will authorize the proceeding, as well as such other facts as will convict respondent of such conduct as the statute makes sufficient ground for a warrant. The affidavit should give the date of the judgment, and is fatally defective if it does not show the form of the action in which it was rendered.—Badger v. Reade, 89 Mich. 771.

Under statutes relating to capias, see ante § 11.

Stating affiant's personal knowledge or means of knowledge in affidavit by agent, see post § 32.

¶ 108. The affidavit must state specific facts positively and not inferentially, on personal knowledge and not on belief; and if the complainant does not know the facts, affidavits must be obtained from those who do. —Proctor v. Prout, 17 Mich. 473; Badger v. Reade, 39 Mich. 771.

¶ 109. The affidavit for a warrant of arrest under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act must show affirmatively that the facts relied on are within affiant's knowledge.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 110. The affidavit under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act (How. St., § 8753, subd. 2) must show personal knowledge of the facts or state circumstances from which the jurisdictional facts must necessarily be deduced. —Marble v. Curran, 63 Mich. 283.

§ 32. ——Affidavit by attorney or agent.

¶ 111. It is no objection to the affidavit for arrest that it was made by plaintiff's attorney, and that it contains no showing that he had personal knowledge of the matters therein set forth, where the facts essential to the jurisdiction are stated positively and are not of such nature that they could not have been within affiant's knowledge.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

§ 33. Affidavits against proceedings.

¶ 112. In proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act, an affidavit that a levy sufficient to satisfy the demand had already been made upon the debtor's personal property is not in itself such a conclusive showing as to require the proceedings to be dismissed.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

§ 34. Examination of defendant.

Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLIV, § 7 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13636 et seq.

¶ 113. Comp. L. 1871, § 7180; How. St. § 8756, allows a complainant to examine the defendant on oath and requires the examination to be taken down and signed by defendant. Held, that where defendant was examined on his own behalf, the want of his signature would not be considered error for the purpose of defeating the proceedings.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

§ 35. Order and findings on hearing.

Levy outstanding as ground for dismissal, see ante ¶ 112.

Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLIV, § 9 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13638 et seq.

¶ 114. It is good practice for a circuit court commissioner to file a written statement of his conclusions on a complaint made to him under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act. —Watson v. Hinchman, 42 Mich. 27.

§ 36. Review of proceedings.

Reviewable error of fact, see ante ¶ 92.

¶ 115. Under How. St., § 8760, in proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act, appeal brings up the whole proceeding to the circuit court for review, and it has full jurisdiction.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 116. The conclusions of a justice upon the sufficiency of evidence to sustain an affidavit for a warrant are not reviewable in the Supreme Court.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

¶ 117. The sufficiency of evidence to sustain a warrant for the arrest of a fraudulent debtor is not open to investigation in reviewing an action on the bond given by the person arrested if it had any legal tendency to establish the case.—Supe v. Francis, 49 Mich. 266.

¶ 118. The Supreme Court, on affirming a conviction under the Fraudulent Debtors'

Act, may issue a warrant of commitment; the power to hear and dispose of the case finally involves the power to order such action as will make the judgment effective. —Smit v. People, 15 Mich. 516.

III. CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM.

§ 37. In general; when allowable.

In what cases and on what grounds capias may issue or defendant be arrested, see ante §§ 4-6, 21, 22.
Alias writ, see post § 42.
Statute, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, §§ 3, 4, 10; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12818, 12819, 12825.

¶ 119. Executions against the body cannot issue upon circuit court judgments in replevin; though under the statutes such executions may issue upon justice's judgments, but an appeal avoids them.—Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204; Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 Mich. 524.

¶ 120. By the common-law rule a capias ad satisfaciendum could issue only in those cases in which the suit might have been commenced by capias ad respondendum; except when the defendant was an attorney or officer of the court.—Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204.

¶ 121. A capias ad satisfaciendum may issue in any action, although commenced by summons, which might have been commenced by a capias ad respondendum.—Forsythe v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 633.

§ 38. When issuable.

Stay for tardiness in issuing, see post § 40.
Delay as releasing special bail, see post § 57.
Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, §§ 23, 24; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12838, 12839.
Where bail has been taken or filed, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12841.
Where defendant is imprisoned, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 12842.

¶ 122. An execution issued against both the body and the property of a person is in fact two executions, and neither could issue while the other was issued and unreturned. —Sink v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 121.

¶ 123. Respondent circuit judge granted a body execution against relator more than three months after the return day of the execution issued against the property. He found from the evidence that the delay in taking out the body execution on the part of the judgment creditor was occasioned by the assurances of settlement held out by relator's attorney. Held, the judge did not exceed his discretion in finding there was the good cause specified in Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10412, 10413, as a basis for extending the time for taking out a body execution beyond the three months' period.—Lapham v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 564.

§ 39. Form and sufficiency of writ.

Of capias ad respondendum, see ante §§ 12-14.
Execution of the writ, see post § 41.
Presumption on habeas corpus as to sufficiency, see Habeas Corpus.

¶ 125. How. St., § 6952, authorizing the issuance of body executions in certain cases upon justices' judgments, does not require that the execution shall recite that the suit was commenced by warrant, or that the judgment was rendered in an action of tort, and the omission of such recitals will not render the execution insufficient.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 126. An execution issued against both the body and the property of a person without an order of the court is absolutely void and being incapable of amendment may be quashed on motion.—Sink v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 121.

§ 40. Stay of execution.

Stay of execution, see Executions, II.
Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 33 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12848 et seq.

¶ 127. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10412, providing that a capias ad satisfaciendum must issue within three months of the return day of an execution against the property, a defendant is entitled to a supersedeas where the capias issued two years after the return day of a property execution although a second execution was out during practically the entire intervening time.—Metcalf v. Moore, 128 Mich. 138.

§ 41. Execution and return to writ.

Time after return for issuance of capias, see ante § 38.

Discharge from imprisonment, see post § 59.
Duration of imprisonment before prisoner can be discharged, see post § 59.
Sufficiency of return to sustain action against special bail, see post ¶ 193.
Pleading return as part of cause of action on special bail, see post § 62.
Keeping prisoner, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 12845.
Execution and return before suit on special bail, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12903.

¶ 128. The following return to a capias ad satisfaciendum is sufficient under Comp. L. 1871, § 5763; How. St., § 7332: "I hereby certify and return that after diligent search and inquiry I am unable to find the within-named defendant, Jacob Bettinger, within my bailiwick and cannot have his body as I am within commanded."—Lichfelt v. Kopp, 38 Mich. 312.

After escape, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12844.

¶ 129. In an action of trespass, where an original execution can issue against a body of a defendant, an alias may also issue against the body on the return of the first "not found."—People ex rel. Moore v. Kehl, 15 Mich. 330.

¶ 130. A plaintiff is not entitled to an alias capias satisfaciendum under Comp. L. 1897, § 10523, providing that a voluntary return of a prisoner before action on the bond shall be a complete defense, and sections 10306 and 10307, providing that no other execution shall issue except where the prisoner escapes, by showing that he dismissed a suit on the bond brought after affirming the defendant out of custody when in fact the defendant is residing within the limits of the county and has been for some time.—Grosslight v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 127 Mich. 414.

IV. BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE, SURRENDER OR LIBERATION, AND DISCHARGE.

§ 43. In general.

Bail in criminal cases, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail.
Affidavit to hold to bail and holding to bail, see ante §§ 15, 16.
Giving bail as waiver of defects in capias, see ante § 18.
Discharge of debtor from imprisonment, see post § 59.
Discharge from bail, see post § 58.
Discharge of sureties, see post § 57.
Recognizance to appear in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards, § 6.
Bond in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards, § 14.
General provisions as to bail in civil actions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV; Comp. L. 1915, § 12979 et seq.

¶ 131. The history and original design of bail to the sheriff, and the statutory provisions of Michigan as to bail in civil cases, considered.—De Myer v. McGonegal, 32 Mich. 120.

§ 44. Time for bail and defaults.

Liabilities of appearance bail on default of principal to put in special bail, see post § 50.
Duration of right to surrender where default is not taken and plaintiff proceeds with action, see post ¶ 152.
Exoneration on surrender after time past for special bail, see post ¶ 163.
Proceedings against sheriff to require special bail on default, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 9 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12987 et seq.

¶ 132. If the twenty days within which a person arrested on a capias is entitled to file special bail expired on Sunday, he has the whole of the following day in which to file it.—Clink v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 242.

¶ 133. A default for failing to file special bail may be disregarded if prematurely entered; and if an attempt in good faith to file such bail has been made, but the bail turns out to be a nullity, defendant should be allowed a further reasonable opportunity to file it and to perfect it if excepted to.—Clink v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 242.

¶ 134. Entry of default in the condition of a bail bond is only the formal expression of a plaintiff's determination to rely upon the breach; the beginning of suit would be as effectual. And where the condition is to put in special bail within a fixed time such bail cannot be put in after suit upon the bond is actually begun, even if default was not entered.—Pease v. Pendell, 57 Mich. 315.

§ 45. Perfecting bail.

In absence of court rules for perfecting bail, see post ¶ 185.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, §§ 4, 5; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12982, 12983.

¶ 135. In capias ad respondendum, bail is not perfected when the sureties justify under Comp. L. 1897, § 10032, but it is necessary under §§ 10000 and 10033 to follow the rules and practices of the court and, in the absence of general court rules, a notification by the court that the defendant could not perfect his bail until it approved the sureties is reasonable and binding.—Ludwick v. Kent Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 106.

¶ 136. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10032, providing that in capias ad respondendum, special bail may justify by affidavit before any officer authorized to take a recognizance, a defendant is not entitled to discharge upon justification by sureties but it is his duty to perfect his bail as provided in section 10031.—Ludwick v. Kent Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 106.

§ 46. Requisites of bond or recognizance.

Perfecting the bail, see ante § 45.
Entry of record, see post § 47.
Copies of bail piece in surrendering and exonerating sureties, see post §§ 51-53.
Omission to give bail pieces as discharging sureties, see post § 57.
Disproving genuineness of bond in action thereon, see post § 63.
Statutory form of special bail and bail piece, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, §§ 2, 3; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12980, 12981.

¶ 137. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5738; How. St., § 7306, which requires bail bonds for appearance to be executed to the officer making the arrest, a bond running to the undersheriff is not invalid if that officer made the arrest.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 138. A recognizance of special bail acknowledged before a notary public is void; notaries have no power to take such acknowledgments.—Clink v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 242.

§ 47. Entry of record.

¶ 139. Where a circuit court commissioner acts upon cause, such as the surrender of the party by his sureties, the fact should in some way be made to appear, in order to show that he had jurisdiction. In the absence of any showing of cause the taking of recognizance is without authority.—Townsend v. People, 14 Mich. 388.

§ 48. Amendments and further bond or recognizance.

Record to sustain further recognizance, see post ¶ 155.
Additional bond when jail limits bond is deficient, see post ¶¶ 168, 169.

¶ 140. Where a recognizance of special bail was lost from the files of the court, and plaintiff moved to substitute a copy to stand in lieu of the original, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to order the substitution to be made without notice to the sureties.—Montgomery v. Henry, 10 Mich. 19.

§ 49. Obligation and liabilities of bail.

Necessity of notice of judgment, see post ¶ 192.
Pleading breach and liability, see post § 62.
Evidence of breach and damages, see post § 63.
Matters operating to discharge sureties, see post § 57.
Suit on bond for escape as barring right to alias capias, see ante ¶ 130.
On bond for appearance, see post § 50.
On jail limits bond, see post § 56.

¶ 141. Where special bail is not put in, a plaintiff may, if he choose, abide by the bail to the sheriff, and go on with his action to final judgment, and afterwards, if needful, may recur to the bond to the sheriff, as he might have done when default happened.—De Myer v. McGonegal, 32 Mich. 120.

¶ 142. The renewal of jurisdiction by waiving the right to a discontinuance given by plaintiffs' neglect to follow the statutory procedure in suits by capias, cannot at common law bind the sureties on the defendants' recognizance of special bail.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

¶ 143. Special bail to a capias are not held to a case not made by the affidavit for the writ, unless, perhaps, where the record shows that the recovery was limited to the matters in the affidavit.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

¶ 144. The special bail for defendant in a suit by capias are not bound to indemnify against charges in the declaration that are materially different from those in the affidavit on which the writ issued.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

¶ 145. Under a strict construction of a bail bond there can be no judgment against a surety in a proceeding by capias brought against an alleged fraudulent debtor unless a judgment is procured in an action against the principal.—Bryant v. Kinyon, 127 Mich. 152.

¶ 146. Plaintiff on a bond for the jail limits given under a capias ad respondendum is entitled to recover only the actual damages sustained by him, while in the case of a ca. sa. the damage is the amount directed to be collected by the execution.—Gunn v. Geary, 44 Mich. 615.

§ 50. ——On appearance bail.

Default for failure to file special bail, see ante § 44.
Matters working discharge of sureties, see post § 57.
Pleading breach and liability, see post § 62.

Force and effect of recognizance to answer to complaint in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards, § 6.

¶ 147. Sureties on appearance bail become liable on failure to put in special bail to the same extent that sureties on special bail would if special bail had been put in.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 148. Appearance bail, where no special bail is entered, remain liable in the same manner and entitled to the same defenses as special bail, and cannot be sued until execution against the body is issued and returned "not found."—Fisher v. Drewa, 63 Mich. 655.

¶ 149. Comp. L. 1897, § 10085, providing that where plaintiff has lost a trial by reason of the failure of an arrested defendant to put in special bail he shall be entitled to judgment on the bail bond, applies only to proceedings where no surrender of the principal defendant has been attempted and no exoneration of the bail has been applied for.—Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. v. Cryan, 167 Mich. 377.

§ 51. Surrender by bail.

Surrender as cutting off statutory right to judgment for failure to put in special bail, see ante ¶ 149.
Directing payment of costs as part of judgment where not made at time of surrender, see post § 65.
Statutory provisions generally, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 19 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12997 et seq.
Surrender by sureties for jail limits, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 27 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13005 et seq.
Keeping of defendant, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 12846.

¶ 150. Sureties on a bail bond are presumed, for their own benefit, to have the custody of their principal; and they may surrender him to exonerate themselves.—Koch v. Coots, 43 Mich. 30.

¶ 151. How. St., § 7338, relative to the surrender of a judgment debtor by his bail and requiring that two copies of the bail piece be produced before the officer does not require certified copies.—Morgan v. Jones, 117 Mich. 59.

¶ 152. Where plaintiff abides by the appearance bail and goes on to final judgment, the right of such bail to surrender their principal in their own exoneration continues to run with the plaintiff's right to insist on their continued liability for the defendant's appearance, and does not terminate until, in regular course, an execution against the defendant's body has failed.—De Myer v. McGowal 32 Mich. 120.

¶ 153. Exoneration of special bail cannot be demanded as matter of strict right unless the principal surrenders himself or is surrendered within eight days after return day of the writ or declaration on the recognizance.—Begole v. Stimson, 39 Mich. 288.

¶ 154. Special bail's right to surrender principal expires eight days from commencement of suit upon recognizance after timely and regular issue and return "not found" of body execution; hence an offer three years afterwards by the substituted executor of the bail does not bring the case within How. St., § 7334, providing that if plaintiff or his attorney give directions preventing service the bail shall be entitled to a verdict in their favor.—Lyman v. Giddey, 96 Mich. 401.

¶ 155. The fact of the surrender and discharge by the commissioner should be made to appear in such way as to show jurisdiction.—Townsend v. People, 14 Mich. 388.

§ 52. Certificate of surrender.

Uncertified copies of bail piece, see also ante ¶ 151.
Indorsement of exoneration on copy of bail piece, see also post ¶ 162.

¶ 156. A certificate made by the sheriff, attached to a copy of the bail piece, and duly acknowledged before the commissioner, that defendant has been committed to and remains in his custody, etc., suffices to show that such defendant is in the sheriff's custody by virtue of a committitur of him in exoneration of bail.—Morgan v. Jones, 117 Mich. 59.

See also post ¶ 180.
As cutting off right to judgment on default of special bail, see ante ¶ 149.
Right of sureties to surrender principal, see ante § 51.
Time for surrender in order to be exonerated, see ante § 51.
Certificate of surrender and exoneration, see ante § 52.

¶ 157. Exoneration of bail is within the authority of circuit court commissioners.—De Myer v. McGonegal, 32 Mich. 120.

¶ 158. A circuit court judge has no jurisdiction of proceedings for the commitment of a defendant, in exoneration of special bail, unless copies of the bail piece are presented to him as the basis of his action, as required by the statute. It is not sufficient that copies of the recognizance of special bail are presented instead of the bail piece.—Elliott v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 62.

¶ 159. Proceedings in exoneration of bail after action brought on the bail bond cannot be held to be void merely because bail, when they undertook to surrender their principal, did not pay or tender the costs incurred by plaintiff up to that date; plaintiff not having appeared before the commissioner or objected to his order upon the ground that the costs had not been paid.—Morgan v. Jones, 117 Mich. 59.

¶ 160. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10047-10049, provide for the discharge of bail upon surrender as a matter of right, when the statute is complied with, and regardless of the wishes or convenience of the plaintiff, and when a defendant is surrendered to the sheriff, who is authorized to keep him until discharged, and the order exonerating bail is duly made, the question of what disposition shall be made of the defendant is between the plaintiff and the sheriff, and it is immaterial that the plaintiff is not entitled to an execution against the body until the return of a fieri facias (Comp. L. 1897, § 10305).—Umphrey v. Emery, 121 Mich. 184.

¶ 161. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10049, providing that when a bail bond shall be taken on arrest of a defendant, the bail may surrender their principal and be exonerated, this may be done even though the plaintiff has sued upon the bond after forfeiture has been declared.—McNeal v. Van Duser, 142 Mich. 593.

¶ 162. While Comp. L. 1897, § 10048, subsection 3, provides that an order liberating bail shall be indorsed on the second copy of the bail piece an order indorsed on a piece of paper attached to the bail piece is sufficient.—McNeal v. Van Duser, 142 Mich. 593.

¶ 163. Defendant sureties upon the arrest by capias of their principal gave a bail bond conditioned that said principal should appear in the action by putting in special bail within fifteen days. The principal defendant failed to put in the special bail within the stipulated time. Plaintiff started suit against defendant sureties on the bail bond. Five days thereafter defendants surrendered their principal into the custody of the sheriff. From the failure of the principal defendant to put in special bail, plaintiff lost a trial in the next term of court. Held, under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10034, 10035, 10047-10049, the trial court properly exonerated the defendant sureties from liability on the bail bond upon the said surrender of their principal to the sheriff.—Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. v. Cryan, 167 Mich. 377.

Keeping of prisoner when surrendered, see also ante ¶ 160.
Discharge of sureties on release of prisoner for failure of plaintiff to pay for keeping, see post ¶ 178.
Bond for jail limits and liability on bond, see post §§ 55, 56.

Mode and expense of keeping, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIII, § 30, Comp. L. 1915, § 12845.
Provisions as to jails and keeping of civil prisoners, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 242.

¶ 164. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 1117, which provides that all officers of the several courts of record shall be liable to arrest, and may be held to bail, in the same manner as other persons, except during the actual sitting of any court of which they are officers, an assistant corporation counsel who has been arrested and has given a bond for jail limits, cannot go beyond the limits of the county to attend the Supreme Court on official business without violating his bond.—Hughes v. Hally, 137 Mich. 433.

¶ 165. On certiorari to review the denial of mandamus to compel the sheriff to relieve the relator, imprisoned on civil process, from solitary confinement; to permit him to have reasonable exercise; to have the daily papers furnished by his relatives; to receive his wife or other relatives and friends at the jail—held, by a divided court, that the evidence sustained the conclusions of the circuit judge that the sheriff had not abused his discretion.—Leach v. Whitbeck, 151 Mich. 327.

§ 55. Bond for jail limits or release.

Misnomer of writ in the bond as affecting liability of sureties, see post ¶ 184.
Measure of liability on bond, see post § 56.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act. Chap. XXV. § 23 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13001 et seq.

¶ 166. A bond for the jail limits, executed under How. St., § 8913, is given to the sheriff in his individual capacity, and stands as indemnity to his successor in office without any written assignment; and during its lifetime it may be assigned by the sheriff in office to the person for whose benefit it was given, whenever a breach occurs.—Kruse v. Kingsbury, 102 Mich. 100.

¶ 167. A jail limits bond is, in effect, a substitute for the custody of the sheriff; and, after admitting the prisoner to the liberty of the jail limits, the sheriff has no longer any power over him, either to restrain or to discharge him.—Kruse v. Kingsbury, 102 Mich. 100.

¶ 168. Under the statute (How. St., § 8016), which authorizes a sheriff, who, having taken a bond for the jail limits, discovers that any surety in such bond is insufficient, to commit the prisoner to close confinement in jail until other good and sufficient sureties shall be offered, the validity of the bond is not affected by the prisoner's not being in actual confinement when the other sureties are obtained.—Kruse v. Kingsbury, 102 Mich. 100.

¶ 169. A judgment debtor, on being arrested on a body execution, gave a jail-limits bond. He was afterwards notified by the successor in office of the sheriff to whom the bond had been given that one of the sureties was insufficient, and that it would be necessary for him to procure a new bondsman. He thereupon took the bond, and secured the signature thereto of an additional surety, and returned the bond to the sheriff. Held, that the contention that the additional surety did not sign the bond under such circumstances as to bind him is without force. —Kruse v. Kingsbury, 102 Mich. 100.

¶ 170. Where one is arrested under a warrant issued upon a fraudulent debtor affidavit that does not conform to the statute, a bond given for his release is void.—Marble v. Curran, 63 Mich. 283.

§ 56. ——Liability on bond.

Extent of liability on jail-limits bond, see also ante ¶ 146.
Pleading breach and liability, see post § 62.

¶ 171. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10521, one who is arrested under a capias ad satisfaciendum and gives a bond for liberty of jail limits, and is surrendered in exoneration of bail and subsequently gives another bond for jail limits and is arrested upon its breach, is liable on the bond for the amount of the attachment with interest to the time of such recovery.—Hughes v. Hally, 137 Mich. 433.

¶ 172. Nothing but the act of God or the enemies of the country will excuse the sheriff for an escape, and the same rule is applicable as against the sureties on a bond to the jail limits, and therefore the leaving of the county by the principal to submit to an examination in a criminal case in justice court, is a breach of the bond.—Smith, Sturgeon & Co. v. Grosslight, 123 Mich. 57.

§ 57. Discharge of sureties.

Effect of failure to insist on discontinuance, see ante ¶ 142.
Proper mode of expunging void recognizance from record, see Records.

¶ 173. The obligations of special bail are in the nature of those of sureties, always and properly recognized as being strictissimi juris, and discharged by anything that so affects the nature and extent of their contract as, by any reasonable probability, to increase risk or liability.—Campau v. Seeley, 30 Mich. 57.

¶ 174. A recognizance should be discharged as to the surety on payment of the sum for which the principal was held, though such surety was bound for more.—People v. Morrison, 75 Mich. 30.

¶ 175. The omission to give bail pieces to the sureties on a bail bond will not invalidate the bond or prejudice the plaintiff in an action thereon if the sureties have waived their rights by not demanding them.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 176. Neglect to proceed against the sheriff or his bail does not, in an action on the bail bond, discharge appearance bail, as the plaintiff can either proceed against the sheriff or take an assignment of the bond for appearance.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 177. Accepting a plea and proceeding in the suit does not waive the right to proceed against the appearance bail.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 178. Bail are discharged where the sheriff has released defendant from custody on plaintiff's refusal to pay the expenses of his board and keeping in advance, as required by How. St., § 8960, after he has been taken on execution.—Prior v. Bodrie, 49 Mich. 200.

¶ 179. Eight months' delay in issuing execution on a judgment does not release the judgment debtor's special bail unless it has done them some special injury.—Vandergazelle v. Rodgers, 57 Mich. 132.

¶ 180. Debt by B. against N., on a recognizance of special bail entered into in 1837, in an action upon contract brought by B. against one C., wherein judgment was rendered against C. in 1842, upon which ca. sa. was afterwards issued and returned non est inventus. N. moved that an exoneretur be entered upon the recognizance. Held, that the motion should be granted, for the act of 1839 operated to prohibit the arrest or imprisonment of C. upon any process issued upon the judgment against him, and thereby rendered the recognizance void.—Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38.

¶ 181. It is immaterial to the liability of the surety in the recognizance that the principal ever since action brought has been a nonresident of the state and without property within it, but has property elsewhere which he refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the demand.—Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38.

¶ 182. Under Laws 1873, Act No. 59, § 21, establishing the superior court of Detroit, a plaintiff transferring his cause thereto from the Wayne circuit court, where it has been pending, is held to have released the special bail given by recognizance in the usual form to the action in the circuit court. The general provision that "any bail that shall originally have been taken shall be discharged" was meant for all cases, whether transferred on the plaintiff's application or the defendant's.—Campau v. Seeley, 30 Mich. 57.

¶ 183. Where an action for fraud by a chattel mortgagee against a chattel mortgagor for fraudulently inducing plaintiff not to record the mortgage is commenced by a capias, and the declaration avers that defendant sold the property to a partnership, an amendment that the property was sold to an individual does not create a variance between the declaration and the affidavit for the writ of capias ad respondendum that will operate to release the sureties on the bail bond.—Priebisch v. Ottenwess, 176 Mich. 476.

¶ 184. A defect in a bond given by one arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum, in stating that the principal was in custody by virtue of a "capias ad respondendum," does not entitle the principal to a discharge from custody when surrendered by his bondsmen, where the mistake was due to the attorney of such principal, and was corrected, with the consent of all parties interested, as soon as it was discovered, the bond being treated as valid.—In re Friedrich, 113 Mich. 468.

¶ 185. The omission of the court to make general rules governing the perfection of bail in capias ad respondendum does not entitle the defendant to liberty upon the justification of his sureties, as the court may still make rules to govern such cases before the expiration of the statutory period for perfecting bail.—Ludwick v. Kent Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 106.

¶ 186. A motion to discharge defendant from bail and to dismiss the action because the plaintiff after beginning it sued in assumpsit on the same cause of action and had a judgment which is res adjudicata, and also thereby waived the tort on which the issuance of the capias is founded, is an improper means of raising those questions; and they should be determined on the issues made by appropriate pleadings at the trial.—Polasky v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 197.

§ 59. Discharge from imprisonment.

Under Fraudulent Debtors' Act, see Jud. Act. Chap. XLIV, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13640.

¶ 187. A person imprisoned on a body execution issued more than ninety days after the return of a property execution, may, under § 10413, Comp. L. 1897 § 13126, How. St., 2nd Ed., be discharged from custody.—In re Lauer's Estate, 184 Mich. 497.

¶ 188. As Comp. L. 1897, § 9701 et seq., contemplates that before the debtor shall be entitled to his discharge he must have been imprisoned in the county jail for the period fixed by the statute, merely showing that the debtor was actually in the custody of the sheriff at the date of the application, and had prior thereto been in nominal custody for the statutory period; i. e., under bonds for the jail limits, was not a sufficient compliance with the statute.—Rusiewski v. Michalski, 135 Mich. 530.

¶ 189. A defendant in custody under a capias ad respondendum cannot anticipate exceptions by having special bail justify and obtain an immediate release; Comp. L. 1897, § 10031, shows that many days must ordinarily elapse before such bail shall become effective; such a bond is intended to be used in conjunction with the bond to the sheriff provided for in section 10000.—Ludwick v. Kent Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 106.

¶ 190. A debtor arrested under a capias ad satisfaciendum pursuant to a conviction for fraud in a civil action, was improperly discharged by a circuit court commissioner who permitted him to make an assignment for the benefit of creditors; as under How. St., chap. 309, § 2, the judgment in question having exceeded $500 in amount, application for discharge could not be made before the expiration of nine months from the time of imprisonment.—Funke v. Hurst, 119 Mich. 182.

¶ 191. A petition for discharge of an arrested debtor as an insolvent which only professes to set forth in the schedule such property as is not exempt from execution, and the affidavit verifying which omits the clause required by the statute to be contained therein, "that I have in no instance created or acknowledged a debt for a greater sum than I honestly owed," is so defective as to give the officer to whom it is presented no jurisdiction.—Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

Suing on bond as cutting off right to put in special bail, see ante ¶ 134.
Right to surrender principal after suit begun on bond, see ante ¶ 161.
Effect of accepting plea and proceeding in action on liability of sureties for appearance, see ante ¶ 177.
Necessity of execution and return before suit on special bail, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12903.
Statutory stay to try main action, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 7 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12985 et seq.

¶ 192. Special bail are not entitled to notice of a judgment against their principal, or to a demand thereunder, before being sued on it.—Vandergazelle v. Rodgers, 57 Mich. 132.

¶ 193. Recognizance of bail cannot be sued on upon the return of an execution against the body merely as "unsatisfied"; it must show that defendant could not be found within the county (Comp. L. 1871, § 5763, How. St., § 7332).—Barnum v. Waterbury, 38 Mich. 280.

§ 61. ——Assignment of bond.

Assignment of jail-limits bond, see also ante ¶ 166.
Validity of assignment by deputy sheriff, see Sheriffs, V.
Statutes, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12984; Jud. Act, Chap. XXV, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 13015.

¶ 194. An assignment of a bail bond need not be made in the official character of the officer to whom the bond ran if such character appears in the bond itself; any assignment purporting to transfer the bond is sufficient.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 195. An assignment of a bail bond need not be under seal unless the statutes require.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

Issues on the pleadings, see post § 63.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.

¶ 196. In an action upon a recognizance of special bail, the omission to allege in the declaration that a fi. fa. has been issued and returned unsatisfied will not, it seems, defeat a judgment if the objection has not been seasonably interposed.—Heymes v. Champlin, 52 Mich. 25.

¶ 197. In an action on a bail bond the ordinary count against bail to the arrest, wherein the plaintiff, without waiving anything, relies on defendant's failure to appear by giving special bail, is inapplicable if the plaintiff allowed such failure to pass and waited until a fieri facias and an execution against the body had proved ineffectual before suing the bail; to this extent he elected to treat the bail to the arrest as substituted for special bail.—Prior v. Bodrie, 49 Mich. 200.

¶ 198. A count in a declaration against bail to the arrest states no cause of action if, on alleging the issue of execution against the body, it contains no averment of return or of anything done under the writ. It should set up a due return under the sheriff's certificate that defendant could not be found within the county, or other facts showing the failure of the execution under circumstances prima facie holding the sureties.—Prior v. Bodrie, 49 Mich. 200.

¶ 199. Where, in a suit against special bail, the declaration does not depart from the language of the affidavit in matter of substance, the declaration is not defective.—Wilkinson v. Nichols, 48 Mich. 354.

¶ 200. The declaration on a recognizance of special bail was held not to depart from the affidavit to hold to bail; where the fuller language was used merely to meet the rules of pleading.—Wilkinson v. Nichols, 48 Mich. 354.

¶ 201. It is error to refuse defendant sureties, in an action on a bond to the jail limits, leave to amend their plea to show the fact, learned for the first time by their attorney at the trial, that the principal was within the jail limits when the suit was commenced, although under Comp. L. 1897, § 10513, a defendant was required to give notice of his reliance on the return of the principal in bar of the action.—Smith, Sturgeon & Co. v. Grosslight, 123 Mich. 87.

§ 63. Issues and evidence.

Questions of the sufficiency of the showing for the warrant, see also ante ¶ 117.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 202. The genuineness of a recognizance of special bail may be disproved by defendants in an action brought thereon.—Elliott v. Green, 10 Mich. 113.

¶ 203. Circuit Court Rule 70, in regard to proof of the execution of written instruments sued on, is not applicable to recognizances of special bail.—Elliott v. Green, 10 Mich. 113.

¶ 204. In an action on a bail bond the judgment in the original suit is admissible in evidence as fixing the measure of damages.—Wilcox v. Ismon, 34 Mich. 268.

¶ 205. The files and record in a case are admissible in a suit upon a recognizance of special bail taken therein.—Heymes v. Champlin, 52 Mich. 25.

¶ 206. Evidence of the proceedings against a person arrested as a fraudulent debtor were properly admitted in an action upon the bond given by him in the course of such proceedings.—Butts v. Davis, 50 Mich. 310.

¶ 207. The certificate of the county clerk to the acknowledgment of a recognizance of bail is not a record made in open court and may be impeached by testimony in denial of the execution of the bond; and it is error to charge as matter of law that the certificate is entitled to more weight than the unsupported oath of the defendant in an action against the bail.—Spencer v. Fish, 43 Mich. 226.

§ 64. Questions of fact and law.

General law, see Trial, VI.

¶ 208. In an action against special bail it is for the court to determine whether the declaration in the original suit set up grounds of action not covered by the affidavit for bail.—Wilkinson v. Nichols, 48 Mich. 354.

§ 65. Judgment.

Mode and form of entry of judgment on bonds or on criminal bail, see Bonds, § 8; Arrest, § 56.
Judgments in general, see Judgments.

¶ 209. Where, in an action upon a bail-bond the bail gave notice to plaintiff of the surrender of their principal, but made no tender of costs, it was not error for the trial court after the proofs were in to direct that defendants pay the costs incurred by plaintiff to the date of the notice.—Morgan v. Jones, 117 Mich. 59.

¶ 1. Monopoly in trade or in any kind of business in this country is odious to our form of government except when permitted in the public interest.—Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632.

¶ 2. All combinations among persons or corporations for the purpose of raising or controlling the prices of merchandise, or any of the necessaries of life, are monopolies, and intolerable; and ought to receive the condemnation of all courts.—Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632.

¶ 3. Any kind of an agreement to enter into an unlawful combination is within the terms of the statute preventing such combinations, and a formal contract is unnecessary. Any arrangement, understanding, or agreement is sufficient.—Attorney General, ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 4. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2949, entitled "An act to prevent trusts, monopolies and combinations of capital, skill and arts, and carrying out restraints in trade and commerce," is in terms prospective and cannot be invoked to defeat a contract lawful when made.—A. Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 Fed. 875.

¶ 5. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2949, an act to prevent trusts, monopolies and combinations of capital, skill and arts, and carrying out restraints in trade and commerce, is directed only against combinations of persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations of persons conspiring to co-operate in violation of its provisions, and it contains nothing prohibitive of the acquisition by a person, persons, corporation, or association of the business or property of any person or association, natural or artificial.—A. Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 Fed. 875.

¶ 6. Pub. Acts 1889, No. 225, How. St., § 9354 et seq., providing that "all contracts, agreements, understandings and combinations made, entered into, or knowingly assented to, by and between any parties capable of making a contract or agreement which would be valid at law or in equity, the purpose or object or intent of which shall be to limit, control, or in any manner to restrict or regulate the amount of production or the quantity of any article or commodity to be raised or produced by mining, manufacture, agriculture, or any other branch of business or labor, or to enhance, control or regulate the market price thereof, or in any manner to prevent or restrict free competition in the production or sale of any such article or commodity, shall be utterly illegal and void," is aimed at combinations between parties who, having each a separate business with no interest or concern in that of the other, join together to restrict the output or enhance the prices of goods, and a contract by one selling a site suitable for a lumber business and dock to a lumber dealer whereby the purchaser agrees not to engage in the coal and fish business in competition with the seller for a term of years, is not invalid thereunder.—Hitchcock v. Anthony, 83 Fed. 779.

¶ 7. A decree under the anti-trust law enjoining defendants from fixing and regulating, or attempting to fix and regulate, the price of labor in installing plumbing supplies and goods in the City of Detroit and vicinity, was vacated on appeal, since an agreement to regulate the price of labor is not forbidden by the common law or by the anti-trust law (Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 255).—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

¶ 8. The claim that agreements restricting competition for contract work, i. e., in which work is done and materials furnished for a lump sum, are not within the anti-trust law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255), was untenable, in an action to restrain members of a club so agreeing, since such restriction of competition in contract work was for the effect and intent of keeping the price of supplies of such members at a fixed or graduated figure, and so was in violation of such statute.—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

§ 2. Corporate combinations or control.

Consolidation of corporations, see Corporations, XXII.

¶ 9. A contract by which a domestic corporation conveys substantially its entire assets to a foreign corporation for the consideration of shares of stock in the latter, abandons its business as proprietor thereof, and becomes practically a mere employee of the foreign corporation, is obnoxious to the provisions of Pub. Acts 1889, No. 225, How. St., § 9354j, entitled an act "declaring certain contracts, agreements, undertakings and combinations unlawful, and to provide punishment for those who shall enter into the same or do any act in performance thereof."—Davis v. A. Booth & Co., 131 Fed. 31; writ of certiorari denied in 195 U. S. 636, 49 L. ed, 355, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 793.

¶ 10. The creation of a monopoly by a mining corporation through the purchase of stock in another corporation and control over the election of the board of directors by obtaining enough proxies to enable it, with the use of its own stock, to elect such a board as it deems fit, offends against Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, § 1, How. St., 2nd. Ed., § 2949, defining a trust as a "combination of capital, skill or arts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons * * * to prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity," and declaring it to be unlawful, against public policy, and void for two or more persons or corporations to "pool, combine, or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected," and section 2 of the Amendatory Act of 1905, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 329, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2943, providing that all "combinations of persons, copartnerships, or corporations made and entered into for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining, or of attempting to establish and maintain, a monopoly of any trade, pursuit, avocation, profession or business, are hereby declared to be against public policy and illegal and void," even though by Pub. Acts 1905, No. 105, § 21, How. St., 2nd. Ed., § 7800, corporations organized under the Michigan Mining Law were empowered to subscribe for, purchase, own and dispose of stock in any company organized under the act or under any other laws, foreign or domestic, for the purpose of mining, refining, smelting or manufacturing any or all kinds of ores or minerals.—Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 155 Fed. 869.

Evidence of intent, see post § 10.
Remedies, see post ¶ 24.
Proceedings against foreign corporation for violation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15015.

¶ 11. A foreign corporation which, for the purpose of obtaining a monopoly of the sale of cash registers in the whole country, harasses and interferes with the business of its rivals in order to ruin them financially and to drive them from business by bringing a multitude of suits against them, without intending to prosecute them to judgment, in bad faith threatening their customers with suits for infringement of patents, interfering with rival agents and salesmen and harassing them in every conceivable way, inducing prospective customers not to purchase rival's goods, and those who have already purchased to break their contracts, etc., is guilty of a violation of § 4, Act. No. 329, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2945, prohibiting any foreign corporation doing business within the state when organized for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining or of attempting to establish and maintain a monopoly.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

§ 4. Under federal statutes; interstate trade.

¶ 12. An agreement unlimited as to territory by which for an annual consideration a party agrees for a period of one year with the right to renew yearly for five years not to manufacture or sell one of the usual and customary products of his factory except to one party alone is clearly within the inhibition of 26 U. S. Stat. 209, chap. 647 and Comp. L. 1897, § 11377.—Clark v. Needham, 125 Mich 84.

¶ 13. A pooling agreement for the operation of several steamer lines as one under one traffic manager with a division of earnings on routes between Toledo, Ohio, and Port Huron, Michigan, is in violation of the Sherman Act against unlawful restraint on and monopolies in interstate trade (26 U. S. Stat. 209, chap. 647).—White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604.

¶ 14. An agreement illegal in so far as it applies to interstate traffic by steamer lines because obnoxious to the Sherman Act (26 U. S. Stat. 209, chap. 647), will not be sustained because as to another portion of the routes traversed wholly within Michigan it might not be obnoxious to the laws of Michigan.—White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604.

§ 5. Exclusive contracts with the public.

¶ 15. A contract by a city with a water supply company to take its supply of water from such company and pay for it, was to the extent that it gave such company an advantage over others desiring to do business of a like nature, a necessary and legitimate result of the right of contract, and did not create a monopoly.—Ludington Water Supply Co. v. City of Ludington, 119 Mich. 480.

¶ 16. It is not the creation of a monopoly when a city from year to year licenses one or more persons to cart the garbage from and out of the city, specifying the manner in which it shall be done.—City of Grand Rapids v. DeVries, 123 Mich. 570.

§ 6. Uniting legal means for monopolistic object.

Conspiracies to work wrong by legal means, see Conspiracy.

¶ 17. The fact that some of the specific agreements contained in the rules of a club considered by themselves are legal is immaterial, where, in an action to restrain a combination in restraint of trade, it appears that such agreements are merely steps to accomplishment of an illegal object; since for that reason they are also illegal.—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

¶ 18. A club consisting of the majority of the master plumbers and all of the wholesale dealers and manufacturers in plumbers' supplies, doing business in the City of Detroit and vicinity, according to the rules of which, such manufacturers and wholesalers agreed to sell supplies to the master plumbers without discrimination, and the master plumbers agreed to buy their entire supplies from the wholesale dealers, distributing their trade equitably, paying the price of such supplies to be fixed by a committee representing both plumbers and dealers; it being agreed that nonmembers should be charged a price from 15 to 30 per cent more than members, and that no work should be done for or supplies sold to any one failing to make a satisfactory settlement with any member of the club, and the members agreeing to submit to the secretary of the club all estimates on jobs, and that such estimates should be governed by the price list supplied by the club, was a combination in restraint of trade under the anti-trust law, and as such was rightly restrained from further violation of such law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255).—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

Partial restraint of trade, see Contracts, IV.
Doctrine of partial validity of Contracts, see Contracts, IV, D.

¶ 19. A monopoly, in order to be unlawful, need not be complete, and it may exist although limited to a narrow territory, but a combination must, in order to violate the law against monopolies, directly, necessarily, and substantially tend towards monopoly.—Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 167 Fed. 704, affirmed 167 Fed. 721.

¶ 20. A company dealing in fish is not a trust and monopoly within Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2949, where its business in this line is but a small fraction of that done by other dealers in the same commodity in the same territory, and it is but one of several hundred dealers in such territory.—A. Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 Fed. 875.

¶ 21. The fact that a combination of master plumbers and wholesalers in plumbers' supplies for the restraint of trade, did not include all the members of that trade so as to create a complete monopoly, was not a defense in an action for the violation of the anti-trust law.—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

¶ 22. A combination of master plumbers and dealers in plumbers' supplies to create a monopoly in the business of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit was illegal, although it did not entirely restrict competition.—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

§ 8. Civil liabilities and consequences.

Effect on prior contracts, see ante ¶ 4.
Illegality of contracts in restraint of trade, see Contracts, IV.
Effect of invalidity on rights of parties to illegal contract, see Contracts, IV, D.
Civil liability, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15023.

¶ 23. A combination of rival dealers for the purpose of creating and carrying out restrictions in trade and commerce, and for the purpose of destroying the credit, reputation and business of a business rival, is actionable both at common law and under the Michigan Anti-trust Act (Act No. 255, Pub. Acts 1899, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., ch. 41).—Frohlich v. Deacon, 181 Mich. 255.

§ 9. Civil remedies and defenses.

Civil action for violation, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15023-15026.
Quo warranto proceedings for violation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15014.

¶ 24. Quære, whether Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, limits the remedy against unlawful combinations under it, against foreign corporations, to a denial of their leave to do business in this state, and a revocation of their license.—Attorney General ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 25. The death of one person who has entered into an unlawful combination does not relieve the other from his responsibility. —Attorney General ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 26. Amending the rules of a club, on the eve of suit to restrain such club from the violation of the anti-trust law, by abrogating the provision which obligated wholesalers to discriminate against nonmember plumbers, and the provision which obligated master plumbers not to sell labor and material below a schedule rate, was ineffectual as a defense in such suit; since the public has a right to some other security than defendants' statement that they would thereafter desist from their illegal undertaking; and since their object remained the same; and such eliminated provisions may be considered as evidence of their purpose.—Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

¶ 27. The purpose and intent of a foreign corporation to violate § 4 of Act. No. 329, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2945, prohibiting any such corporation doing business within the state, and revoking any permission previously granted, if organized for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining a monopoly, may be shown by its acts and policy pursued after organization. It is not necessary to show that the organizers expressly bound themselves to establish and maintain a monopoly of a business; it is sufficient to show that they acted together in pursuance of a common object, which while presupposing agreement between them in a broad sense, does not require that an agreement or contract in a technical sense be shown.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

¶ 28. Notwithstanding that it must be shown that a foreign corporation has, since its admission to the state, been organized or maintained for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining a monopoly, in order to bring it within § 4 of Act No. 329, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2945, it is competent to show acts done or committed prior to such time by its predecessors in the claimed conspiracy, for the sole purpose of characterizing and explaining its conduct since coming into the state, where its corporate predecessors were composed of the same stockholders, officers and agents, and were identical in mind and body with the respondent corporation.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

¶ 29. Testimony of defendants in an action for violation of the anti-trust law that their combination resulted in the lowering, instead of raising of prices, was disregarded, the combination being in restraint of trade. —Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538.

¶ 30. Evidence held insufficient to show that a mining company buying and voting stock in other mining companies in the same mining region, in which copper of a particular kind was mined, violated the provisions of Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 255, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2949 et seq., denouncing all combinations for the purpose of preventing competition in "manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce, or any commodity," and Pub. Acts 1905, No. 329, § 2, How. 2nd Ed., § 2943, declaring illegal all combinations entered into "for the purpose and with the intent of establishing and maintaining or of attempting to establish and maintain a monopoly" of any pursuit or business.—Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 167 Fed. 721, affirming 167 Fed. 704.

§ 11. ——Judgment and relief.

¶ 31. Whether a judgment of ouster or a fine shall be imposed on a corporation under § 9961, Comp. L. 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14076, for establishing and maintaining or attempting to establish and maintain a monopoly in violation of § 4, Act No. 329, Pub. Acts, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 2945, rests in the sound discretion of the court.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

¶ 1. "Commerce," as a term, comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between citizens of one country and the citizens or subjects of other countries, and between citizens of different states.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

¶ 2. Commerce among the states is a practical and not a technical conception.—Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699.

§ 2. Interstate and intrastate; state and federal powers.

Regulative powers of Railroad Commission, see Public Service.

¶ 3. The federal power over interstate commerce is exclusive.—Michigan Cent. R Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 183 Mich. 6.

¶ 4. The power given Congress by the United States Constitution to regulate commerce among the several states is exclusive and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court upon that question are controlling.—People v. White, 197 Mich. 283.

¶ 4a. The Initial Carrier's Act, 34 Stat. L. 595, chap. 3591, § 7, making the initial carrier liable for loss or damage to goods caused by the connecting carrier, is constitutional.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 5. Without congressional permission a state cannot exclude, directly or indirectly, the subjects of interstate commerce, or, by the imposition of burdens thereon, regulate such commerce.—Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; reversing 74 Mich. 579.

¶ 6. No state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form, whether by way of duties laid on the transportation of the subjects of that commerce or on the receipts derived from that transportation, or on the occupation or business of carrying it on, for the reason that such taxation is a burden on that commerce and amounts to a regulation of it, which belongs solely to Congress.—Lyng v. People, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. Ct. 725, reversing 74 Mich. 579.

¶ 7. A state cannot be permitted, under the guise of a tax upon business transacted within its borders, to impose a burden upon commerce among the states, when the business so taxed is itself interstate commerce.—Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 888, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; reversing Fargo v. Auditor General, 57 Mich. 598.

¶ 8. Commerce which is carried on entirely within the limits of a state, and does not extend to or affect other states, is excluded from federal control.—The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 557, 19 L. ed. 999, affirming Fed. Cas. No. 3,564.

§ 3. Supersession of state laws by federal exercise.

Supersession of state law as to bills of lading by Carmack Amendment, see also Bills of Lading, ¶ 8.

¶ 9. Since Congress by the Act of June 29, 1906, acted in relation to terminal and storage charges on interstate traffic, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has acted thereunder by approving the demurrage rate adopted by the American Railway Association, so much of Act No. 173, Pub. Acts 1911

(How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 6526, 6531), giving the Michigan State Railway Commission power to fix car service and demurrage charges over interstate shipments, is void.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 183 Mich. 6.

What constitutes business within state by foreign corporation, see Foreign Corporations, I.

Evidence that installation was essential part of sale by foreign corporation and therefore interstate, see also Foreign Corporations, I.

¶ 9a. Because of the operation of the interstate commerce law, Laws 1893, Act No. 79, requiring payment of a franchise fee, must be held not to apply to a foreign corporation the business of which in Michigan consists merely of selling through itinerant agents and delivering commodities manufactured outside of the state.—Colt & Co. v. Sutton, 102 Mich. 324; Moline Plow Co. v. Wilkinson, 105 Mich. 57; M. I. Wilcox Cordage & Supply Co. v. Mosher, 114 Mich. 64.

¶ 10. An agent of a foreign corporation who travels about with a horse and wagon soliciting orders for tea, coffee, and spices, going from house to house, and delivering goods previously ordered, who is paid in commissions, and in taking orders makes a memorandum thereof on a card furnished by the company, but no memorandum is given to the person ordering and no money collected until the goods are delivered, some orders being filled from stock kept at his place of business and part from goods ordered from the corporation without the state, is not engaged in interstate commerce, but is engaged in peddling goods for a corporation which has the status of a domestic corporation when admitted to do business in the state.—People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391.

¶ 11. An Illinois corporation sent its salesmen into Michigan, who carried goods with them and sold them to buyers. Held, this was not interstate commerce.—Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Zierleyn, 163 Mich. 399.

¶ 12. Defendant owned a general stock of goods located in a general store in Chicago. He for several years traveled in Michigan soliciting orders for said goods. His course of business was to have a car of goods consigned to him in Michigan, and the goods were thus shipped to him in bulk. When the car arrived he would fill his orders therefrom. Held, defendant's business was not interstate commerce.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417; reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

¶ 13. An agent of a grocery company which maintains its headquarters in a foreign state, but also maintains a solicitor's department in a building within the state where a stock of goods is kept, and takes orders from customers from wagons, is, in so far as an order taken within the state is for goods that are in stock in such department at the time the order is taken, engaged in intrastate commerce so as to be guilty of peddling within Ordinance No. 14 of the City of Munising.—People v. Watters, 192 Mich. 462.

¶ 14. One who sells goods on commission by soliciting orders from house to house for future delivery and fills such orders by delivering goods shipped him by his employer from another state is engaged in interstate commerce.—People v. White, 197 Mich. 283.

¶ 15. A foreign corporation which ships goods to an agent within the state to be stored by him until sold, is not engaged in interstate commerce.—E. A. Lange Medical Co. v. Brace, 186 Mich. 453.

¶ 16. A nonresident corporation which contracts to sell and deliver goods to a resident f. o. b. at certain cities in other states and to take back unused goods at the expiration of the contract is engaged in interstate commerce.—Standard Fashion Co. v. Cummings, 187 Mich. 196.

¶ 17. The agent of plaintiff, a foreign corporation, took an order from defendant, a resident of Michigan, by which plaintiff agreed to place and maintain defendant's advertisement on a theater curtain in Detroit for a space of three years. The order was accepted by plaintiff and the advertisement prepared outside the state. Plaintiff had not complied with the statute governing the doing of business in Michigan by foreign corporations. Held, the transaction was not interstate commerce so as to be outside the statute, but was of a purely local character, and plaintiff could not, under Act No. 206, Pub. Acts 1901, as amended by Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, recover the contract price in a suit in assumpsit.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

¶ 18. Where mechanical appliances are to be manufactured and shipped from one state to another and there installed by the seller such act of installation constitutes intrastate commerce in absence of proof that the process of installation is so complex as to necessitate the work being done by the seller's employees, and thus to constitute an essential requisite to the sale.—Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699; E. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Adolph Leitelt Iron Works, 196 Mich. 552.

§ 5. ——Sale in original packages.

¶ 19. A sale of liquors to be shipped in the original packages from another state where it is manufactured, and delivered to a purchaser in this state, is interstate commerce and not subject to local regulation, though both parties to the contract are residents of Michigan and the contract was made within the state.—Sloman v. William D. C. Moebs Co., 139 Mich. 334.

¶ 20. The right to importation of ardent spirits, distilled liquors, ale and beer from one state into another includes the right of sale in the original packages at the place where the importation terminates.—Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725, reversing 74 Mich. 579.

Validity of regulations, see post §§ 13-15.
What constitutes injury in course of interstate transportation by common carrier within Federal Employers' Liability Acts, see Master and Servant, III.

¶ 21. Shipments for interstate commerce become impressed with the character of such commerce from the first receipt by a carrier, which continues until the final delivery to the consignee.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 183 Mich. 6.

¶ 22. The act of floating rafts down a navigable river in a state used in interstate commerce to points where the logs are to be manufactured into lumber does not constitute interstate commerce.—Tittabawasee Boom Co. v. Cunning, How. N. P. 82.

¶ 23. A telephone company is engaged in interstate commerce when its business extends into other states.—Michigan Tel. Co. v. City of Benton Harbor, 121 Mich. 512.

§ 7. License, tax and inspection laws.

¶ 24. It is not an interference with interstate commerce to require a license of one who distributes articles of merchandise shipped into the state in bulk, such articles to be returned or paid for at a later date to an associate of the distributor.—City of Muskegon v. Hanes, 149 Mich. 460.

¶ 25. A state law that does not purport to be a mere regulation of commerce, but assumes to impose a tax upon a particular kind of business, aiming to apportion such tax according to the subject-matter on which it is imposed and ordaining the means for ascertaining that amount, does not contravene the federal constitution.—Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

¶ 26. A specific tax obliging mining companies to pay more upon mineral obtained in the state, and exported before it is smelted, than on that which is smelted within the state, is a tax on interstate and foreign commerce, and is an application of the doctrine of protection, and is void.—Jackson Min. Co. v. Auditor General, 32 Mich. 488.

¶ 27. A state statute imposing an occupation tax so specialized as to operate as a discriminative burden against the introduction and sale of the products of another state, or against the citizens of another state, is an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, and is invalid. So held of Laws 1875, Act No. 226 (How. St., §§ 1277-1280), taxing the wholesale importation of liquors from other states.—Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454, reversing 53 Mich. 264.

§ 8. ——Blue Sky Law.

¶ 28. The Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 46 (Comp. L. 1915, § 11945 et seq.), providing for the regulation of the sale and disposition of bonds, stocks or other securities within the state by the Michigan Securities Commission and the issuance of licenses, is not unconstitutional as an interference with interstate commerce within the prohibition of U. S. Const., art. 1, § 8, in the absence of federal legislation, although foreign corporations must give certain information to, and obtain a license from the commission, before they can do business within the state, since interstate commerce is only incidentally regulated.—Merrick v. N. W. Halsey Co., 242 U. S. 568, 61 L. ed. 498, 37 Sup. Ct Rep. 227, reversing 228 Fed. 805.

¶ 29. The Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of domestic and foreign investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, constitutes a direct burden on interstate commerce in stocks and bonds and is invalid within the commerce clause of the federal constitution.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

§ 9. ——Peddling and hawking.

¶ 29a. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 248, making it unlawful to peddle without a license in the several townships of the state, is unconstitutional, in that section 8 discriminates against nonresidents by permitting manufacturers, farmers and mechanics "residing in this state" to sell their work or production, by sample or otherwise, without procuring the license provided for.—Rodgers v. Kent Circuit Judge, 115 Mich. 441.

¶ 30. A municipal ordinance imposing a license fee upon peddlers will not be held invalid, as contravening the federal interstate commerce provisions in the case of one who is a resident of this state, and who does not sell goods in the original package, but from a general stock kept within the state. —People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428.

¶ 31. A municipal ordinance requiring a license fee of peddlers, etc., is invalid as an interference with interstate commerce in so far as it applies to one selling by sample goods to be furnished by a foreign concern upon receipt of the orders taken.—People v. Bunker, 128 Mich. 160.

¶ 32. A municipal council cannot make a municipal ordinance providing for a license fee on hawkers and peddlers which will apply to persons who are in good faith engaged in interstate commerce, because such a license fee would be in effect a tax on such business.—People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391.

¶ 34. A foreign merchant who solicits orders within the state for groceries and other merchandise, which are shipped in carload lots to the state consigned to the seller, and fills the orders from the cars is engaged in interstate commerce so as to render Comp. L. 1897, § 5324 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2126), providing that no person shall be authorized to travel from place to place within the state for the purpose of selling goods or soliciting orders therefor without a license as a hawker or peddler repugnant to the commerce clause of the federal constitution.—Stewart v. Michigan, 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476, reversing 167 Mich. 417.

Original package doctrine, see ante § 5.

¶ 35. A discrimination in state legislation against the products of another state is none the less unlawful because it applies to sellers of intoxicating liquors.—Walling v. People, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454, reversing 53 Mich. 264.

¶ 36. The commerce clause of the federal constitution is violated by Session Laws 1875, Act No. 226, imposing a specific license fee upon persons who shall engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquor to citizens or residents of the state at wholesale or solicit orders for liquor at wholesale, to be shipped from without the state, while not having his, their or its principal place of business in the state.—Walling v. People, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454, reversing 53 Mich. 264.

¶ 37. The objection to the validity of Session Laws 1875, No. 226, imposing a specific license fee upon persons who shall engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquor to citizens or residents of the state at wholesale or solicit orders for liquor at wholesale to be shipped from without the state, while not having his, their or its place of business within the state, as offending the commerce clause to the federal constitution, was not removed by the enactment of a later act (How. St., § 1281) imposing a higher tax upon the business of manufacturing or selling liquor, since the classes of persons taxed are different, the principal being taxed under the latter act, and drummers or agents of the foreign manufacturer being subject of the tax under the former law.—Walling v. People, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454, reversing 53 Mich. 264.

¶ 38. The liquor law of 1887 so far as it affects the right of a manufacturer residing in another state to sell in this state in the original packages liquors manufactured in another state without having paid the tax imposed by said act upon wholesale dealers is void as an attempt by the state to regulate interstate commerce.—Lyng v. People, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. St. Rep. 725, reversing 74 Mich. 579.

¶ 39. Pub. Acts of 1887, No. 313, 3 How. St., § 2283c4 et seq., providing for the levying of an annual tax of $300 "upon the business of selling only brewed or malt liquors at wholesale or retail, or at wholesale and retail" and "upon the business of manufacturing brewed or malt liquors for sale, sixty-five dollars per annum," and exempting the manufacturer from the tax imposed on the wholesale dealer, is invalid as an interference with interstate commerce by foreign manufacturers desiring to sell, from a warehouse operated by an agent within the state, beer in the original casks as brought into the state.—Lyng v. People, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725, reversing 74 Mich. 579.

§ 11. ——Fish and game laws and regulations.

¶ 40. The regulation of the taking of game and fish within the confines of the state is not an interference with interstate commerce. —People v. Setunsky, 161 Mich. 624.

¶ 40a. Pub. Acts 1907, No. 153, makes it unlawful for any kind of boat, tug, or launch to be used for commercial fishing without registering it and taking out a license, and prescribes license fees varying with the different classes of boats. Held, such statute is not open to the objection that it is an interstate regulation of the use of boats and not a regulation of fishing.—People v. Setunsky, 161 Mich. 624.

¶ 41. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 88, prohibiting any person from having in his possession certain kinds of fish weighing less than one pound is not repugnant to U. S. Const., art. 1, § 8, being the interstate commerce clause of the constitution, even though applying to fish caught in waters outside the jurisdiction of this state.—People v. Lassen, 142 Mich. 597.

¶ 42. It being competent for the state, in order to enforce its game laws, absolutely to prohibit the importation and sale of game and fish during a closed season, or during the entire year, Pub. Acts 1893, No. 196, prohibiting the sale, exposing for sale, or having in possession for the purpose of sale, any kind of bird, game, or fish during a closed season, and Pub. Acts. 1895, No. 223, prohibiting specifically the sale of quail, woodcock, and partridge at any season of the year, are not invalid as unlawfully restricting interstate commerce.—People v. O'Neil, 110 Mich. 324.

§ 12. Regulation of corporations.

Application to interstate business, see also ante §§ 4, 5.

¶ 43. Comp. L. 1897, § 8574, imposes a tax upon corporations, both domestic and foreign, doing a retail mercantile business within the state, and avoids all contracts made by them until the tax is paid, and is construed not to be applicable in cases where a foreign corporation does business in the state merely by selling through itinerant agents and delivering commodities manufactured outside the state.—People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391.

§ 13. Railroad and transportation laws and regulations.

State and federal powers, see also ante § 2.
Restriction of Railroad Commission's functions to intrastate trade, see Public Service.

¶ 44. The power of Congress to legislate on the liability of common carriers within the state discussed.—American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368, affirmed 24 How. U. S. 1, 16 L. ed. 674.

¶ 45. The commerce clause of the federal constitution was not violated by the Railroad Commission Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530, providing that every common carrier operating within the state shall receive and transport at reasonable rates all car load traffic offered for transportation under the usual conditions locally consigned between points in the same city or town and shall receive and transport at reasonable rates from any junction point or transfer point or intersection with another railroad in such city or town all such car load freight destined to team tracks or other sidings on any line operated by the delivering carrier, and shall deliver such cars upon such team tracks or sidings in the city or town where such cars are received from any such connecting line, when required so to do, on the ground that the enforcement of the statute will necessarily result in congesting the terminal facilities of the railroads, and thus make it impossible for them to carry on interstate business without seriously delaying and interfering with such commerce, since the statute is confined purely to intrastate business, and to interfere with interstate commerce such must be its direct, immediate and necessary effect, and whether such effect results is a question of fact which must be proved.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 198 Fed. 1009, affirmed in 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

¶ 46. An order of the Michigan Railroad Commission made pursuant to Act 312, Pub. Acts 1907, ordering the Michigan Central Railroad Company to install a physical connection with an interurban railway running between points within the state, and to provide for the interchange of cars with said railway, is an order relating to intrastate traffic, and does not violate the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States. (Separate opinion by Ostrander, C. J.)—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 168 Mich. 230, affirmed in 236 U. S. 615, 59 L. ed. 750, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 422.

§ 14. ——Rates and charges.

Validity of rate legislation as delegating legislative powers, see Constitutional Law, II.
Injunctions against enforcement of rates, see Injunctions; Public Service.

¶ 48. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 90, § 9, requiring railroad companies in this state to keep for sale 1,000-mile tickets "at a price not exceeding $20 in the lower peninsula and $25 in the upper peninsula," to be issued in the names of the purchaser, his wife and children, and to be valid for two years after date of purchase, does not contemplate a sale of mileage which shall be good outside of the state—the reference to locality being designed, not to fix the place where the tickets are to be placed on sale, but to indicate the respective regions of travel and the price of 1,000 miles of transportation in the respective peninsulas; and it is, therefore, not unconstitutional as an attempted regulation of interstate commerce.—Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460, reversed on other grounds in 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

¶ 49. Pub. Acts 1891, No. 90, regulating fares of railroads within the state, based upon the gross earnings of their passenger trains, includes only domestic commerce and is therefore not a state regulation of interstate commerce.—Commissioner of Railroads v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Mich. 669.

§ 15. ——Taxation.

¶ 50. Laws 1867, Act No. 140, How. St., § 3719, requiring express companies to pay a specific tax of one per cent on the gross amount of business within the state, is not void as infringing on the power of congress over commerce.—Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

¶ 51. Mich. Laws 1883, Act No. 152, which levies a tax upon the gross receipts of railroads for the carriage of freights and passengers into, out of, or through the state, is a tax upon commerce between the states, and is therefore void.—Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 888, 77 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857, reversing Fargo v. Auditor General, 57 Mich. 598.

¶ 52. A tax upon the gross receipts of a foreign merchant's dispatch transportation company for freight carried from points without the state to points within the state and from points within the state to points without the state, under the Act of June 5, 1883, providing for the imposition of an annual tax of 2½ per cent of the gross receipts of their receipts for freight earned within the limits of the state from all persons and corporations running railroads into the state, is invalid as an interference with interstate commerce, within the prohibition of the federal constitution.—Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 888, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; reversing Fargo v. Auditor General, 57 Mich. 598.

¶ 53. The Act of June 4, 1897 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6631), amending the Act of May 27, 1893, § 3, and levying a specific tax upon the property and business of every railroad corporation operated within the state, and providing that "when the railroad lies partly within and partly without this state, prima facie, the gross income of said company from such road for the purposes of taxation shall be on the actual earnings of the road in Michigan, computed by adding to the income derived from the business transacted by said company entirely within this state, such proportion of the income of said company arising from the interstate business as the length of the road over which said interstate business is carried in this state bears to the entire length of the road over which said interstate business is carried," is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce.—Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 48 L. ed. 229, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107.

¶ 54. No state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce by way of duties laid on the transportation of the subjects of that commerce, or on the receipts derived from that transportation, or on the occupation or business of carrying it on.—Lyng v. People, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725, reversing 74 Mich. 579.

§ 16. Shipping and water traffic regulations.

As to ferries, see post § 17.
Regulation of fishing boats, see ante § 11.
Maritime causes and state jurisdiction, see Admiralty; Courts, V.

¶ 55. The enrollment and license of a vessel for interstate and foreign commerce does not make her exclusively an interstate or foreign carrier or withdraw her entirely from state regulations of an intrastate character.—Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 43; Delaney Forge & Iron Co. v. The Winnebago, 142 Mich. 84, affirmed in 205 U. S. 354, 51 L. ed. 836, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509.

¶ 57. The state may enact laws for the protection of the health, lives and property of its people in respect to those subjects over which congress has the power to legislate, and such laws are valid and may be enforced so long as they do not conflict with federal legislation. A vessel engaged in interstate commerce, therefore, is subject to the provisions of How. St., § 2033, requiring steam vessels navigating the waters of this state to be provided with suitable fire screens, since said statute is not in conflict with the act of congress relating to the equipment of steam vessel (Rev. Stat. U. S. chaps. 1, 2, tit. 52) and the regulations adopted thereunder by the board of supervising inspectors.—Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co., 106 Mich. 582.

¶ 58. Comp. L. 1897, § 10789 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13625), relating to mechanics' liens for materials furnished or services rendered in building watercraft, was within the power of the state to enact laws and enforce liens concerning contracts not maritime in their nature and it is no valid objection that the enforcement of the statute may prevent or obstruct the prosecution of a voyage of interstate character.—Iroquois Transportation Co. v. Dalaney Forge & Iron Co., 205 U. S. 354, 51 L. ed. 836, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509, affirming 142 Mich. 84.

¶ 59. A license fee for keeping a ferry between Detroit and the Canada shore is not a regulation of commerce within the meaning of the U. S. Const., art. 1, § 8, subd. 3.—Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 43.

COMMON AND CIVIL LAW.

TREATS of the Common Law of England and the Civil Law of France as adopted elements of the laws and legal customs of Michigan.

Evidence as to common law of other states, see Evidence, III.

¶ 1. The common law is in force in this state except so far as it is repugnant to or inconsistent with our constitution and statutes.—Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

¶ 2. The common law has prevailed here in ordinary matters ever since the United States took possession. Questions of property not clearly excepted from it are governed by it, modified only by such circumstances as render it inapplicable to our local affairs. —Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18.

¶ 3. Only such portions of the common law have been adopted here as are applicable to our situation.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 4. The common law recognized as adopted into Michigan jurisprudence is the English common law unaffected by statute.—In re Lamphere's Case, 61 Mich. 105.

§ 2. ——Abrogation and revival.

Construction of statutes in derogation, see Statutes, V.

¶ 5. Where there is a plain conflict between the common law and the statute, the latter must control.—Smith v. Martin, 124 Mich. 34.

¶ 6. A statute (Laws 1841, ——) dispensing with the necessity of proof of emission in sodomy is a legislative recognition of the common-law rule on the subject, and the repeal of such statute (Rev. St. 1846, p. 730) revives the common law and should be given force in determining what that rule was prior to the enactment.—People v. Hodgkin, 94 Mich. 27.

¶ 7. Where the reason of the common-law rule requiring a particular averment to be made has been abrogated by statute, the rule itself is done away with.—Newton v. Gordon, 72 Mich. 642.

¶ 7a. The declaration in the ordinance of 1787 that "the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence shall be common highways, and remain forever free," supersedes the common-law doctrine of the necessity of usage or custom to establish a public right, even if that rule would otherwise prevail in the region over which the ordinance extended.—Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519.

§ 3. Civil law and custom of Paris.

¶ 8. Prior to the taking effect of the ordinance of 1787 and to the negotiations of Jay's Treaty, the region afterwards embraced in the territory of Michigan was governed in civil matters by the French law, including the custom of Paris as modified by royal edicts.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

¶ 9. The custom of Paris in 1810 probably applied to few cases if to any, and was in that year expressly abrogated by the territorial legislature.—Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18.

COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

TREATS of agreements by a debtor with all of his creditors, or with two or more of them, by which the debts are to be discharged by mutual compromise at part of their face. It excludes discharge by agreement with a specific creditor or claimant by accord as to the amount to be paid and a satisfaction of the original claim thereby (see Accord and Satisfaction) and compositions by official intervention as an incident of bankruptcy (see Bankruptcy).

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; effect.

§ 1. In general; effect.

Composition in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, § 12.

¶ 1. After the time for performance of a composition has expired without performance, the creditor may sue on his original claim. —Harrison v. Gamble, 69 Mich. 96.

¶ 2. Only the amount remaining unpaid under the composition agreement and not the full balance due on notes which represented the original debt is recoverable in assumpsit on such notes, where they, being put in evidence, show by indorsements that there was a compromise at half face and that payment had been made thereon and other evidence shows the same, but plaintiff, claiming breach of the composition by delay, fails to show what terms or times of payment were contained in the compromise. Under such circumstances a composition is established but no breach of it reinstating the original debt.—Browning v. Crouse, 43 Mich. 489.

¶ 3. A creditor, misled by the fraudulent representations of his debtor as to the terms upon which he had compromised with his other creditors, compromised with him. Afterwards, upon discovering the fraud, he brought suit. Held, that by retaining the money received he barred himself from suing in assumpsit, but could sue in case.—Walsh v. Sisson, 49 Mich. 423.

¶ 4. Tender of a check is a sufficient performance of a promise to pay contained in a composition agreement, if no objection is made to the medium of payment and the only other objection, that of tardiness, is unavailing because of waiver.—Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339.

¶ 5. One of the creditors who has entered into a composition with the debtor cannot treat delay in final payment as a breach of the composition agreement and recover the entire debt, where previous delays in paying instalments at the time agreed were waived by accepting them without objection, and where the final payment was tendered by check, as the others were made, and the rejection of the check was not on the ground that it was not a legal medium of tender; since under the circumstances the delay did not amount to an abandonment of the composition.—Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339.

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

TREATS of the acts and procedure whereby judgment is entered on confession without the previous pendency of an action (Jud. Act, Chap. XXII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12793).

Analysis.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Warrant of attorney and proof.
§ 3. Judgment and entry.

§ 1. In general.

Consent decrees or judgments in suits, see Equity, X; Judgments.
Effect of foreign judgments on confession, see Foreign Judgments.
Discharge in bankruptcy as ground for vacation of confessed judgment, see Bankruptcy, ¶ 61.

¶ 1. Since an infant cannot in his own name confess judgment, and a partner has no power implied to do so, a judgment confessed by an infant's partner in the name of the firm is void, and will not support an attachment as against a previous assignee of the goods attached.—Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236.

Warrant in one state and confession in another, which law governs, see Conflict of Laws, § 43.
Sufficiency of warrant to sustain foreign confessed judgment, see Foreign Judgments.

¶ 2. It is no objection to a judgment entered up in the circuit court by confession that the warrant of attorney is upon the same piece of paper as the note it authorizes judgment to be taken upon. The warrant of attorney and note are still to be regarded as separate instruments (Comp. L. 1857, § 4441, How. St., § 7662), notwithstanding they are thus connected.—Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272.

¶ 3. A warrant of attorney contained in the promissory note evidencing the debt is void under Comp. L. 1897, § 10299, which requires a separate instrument.—Acme Food Co. v. Kirsch, 166 Mich. 433.

¶ 4. The note and warrant of attorney bearing different dates are presumed to have been executed at the times they respectively bear date, notwithstanding they are upon the same paper.—Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272.

¶ 5. It would not be a valid objection to a judgment taken by confession that they were both executed at the same time.—Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272.

¶ 6. A warrant of attorney need not be proved to sustain a confession of judgment taken thereunder within a year and a day fter its execution.—Elliott v. Ives, 44 Mich. 190.

§ 3. Judgment and entry.

¶ 7. A judgment upon a bond and warrant of attorney as provided by the statute may be entered in vacation.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

TREATS of the rights of persons as affected by the difference in laws of the state wherein they are asserted from those of some other state or nation involved by the fact of the residence of one or both of the parties therein or the fact of the situs of the property or of the actionable facts having been foreign. It excludes so-called conflict between earlier and later statutes of the same state (see Statutes, VII, and see also specific topics affected by the statutes in question) and so-called conflict between federal and state laws and jurisdiction (see Constitutional Law, IV; Commerce; Bankruptcy; Courts, V).

¶ 1. Lawful acts done in this state cannot be made unlawful by provisions of law having no authority beyond the territory of the state adopting them.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 2. The laws of one state have no extraterritorial effect, except as given by the principles of comity, and no tribunal in the state can extend its powers beyond the territory of the state so as to subject either persons or property to its decisions.—Colvin v. Jones, 194 Mich. 670.

¶ 3. The power of determining whether, and how far, or with what modifications, or upon what conditions, the laws of one state, or any rights dependent upon them, shall be recognized in another, belongs to the legislature of the latter; the comity involved is that of the states and not of the courts, and the judiciary must be guided in deciding the question by the principle and policy adopted by the legislature.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 4. In ascertaining the legislative policy of a state as to the recognition of the laws of another state, or of rights dependent thereon, the courts of the former state are to be guided not only by the express provisions made by the legislature and the natural implication from them, but also by their silence, for if they have made no provision at all upon the question involved, it may reasonably be inferred that they intended to adopt the generally received principles of comity, and to that extent to recognize the rights dependent upon the foreign laws.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 5. The rule of comity is never allowed to operate when it will contravene the rights of a citizen of the state where the action is being taken.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 119.

¶ 6. The enforcement of a statute of another state or country is not contrary to the public policy of the state, though such statute differs from the law of the forum, unless it is against good morals or natural justice or unless its enforcement would be prejudicial to the general interests of the citizens of the state.—Rick v. Saginaw Bay Towing Co., 132 Mich. 237.

¶ 7. Where the law of another state applies and governs it must be accepted without question of the correctness of the rule of law there in force.—Douglass v. Paine, 141 Mich. 485.

§ 3. Effect of public policy.

Public policy of the state, see Contracts, IV; and see also other specific topics as to which the policy is questioned.

¶ 8. The doctrine of state comity will not be applied in behalf of a foreign corporation seeking to recover upon a claim or contract expressly prohibited by law, or one which is clearly at variance with the settled policy of the state.—Seamans v. Temple Co., 105 Mich. 400.

¶ 9. A contract made in a foreign state and there valid, is unenforceable in Michigan, when in violation of the public policy thereof.—Curtis v. Mueller, 184 Mich. 148.

¶ 10. A stipulation for an attorney fee in a mortgage executed in a foreign state and there valid, is not enforceable in Michigan, since against the public policy thereof.—Curtis v. Mueller, 184 Mich. 148.

¶ 11. It is the duty of courts to extend the principles of comity to sister states and to recognize generally the existence of liens under foreign statutes.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 12. Recognition of liens under laws of other states does not involve giving foreign liens priority over other liens justly acquired in Michigan merely because the former, in the state where they first attached, have by statute superiority or priority.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

§ 5. Property and exemption rights under foreign laws.

What law governs conveyances of personalty in another state, see post § 25.
What law governs rights in personalty, see post § 24.
What law governs realty, see post III.
Law governing devolution on death, see post IV.

¶ 13. Though, as a general rule, the matter of exemption is controlled by the lex fori and not by the lex loci contractus, yet when the person entitled to exemption keeps his person and property within the locus contractus, and is not brought, except by substituted service, within this state, he cannot be deprived of the exemption secured to him by the law of his domicile.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

¶ 14. A statute exempting a corporation from garnishment has no extraterritorial force; and the fact that a corporation organized under the laws of another state is by those laws exempt from garnishment does not render it so exempt when doing business in Michigan.—First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242.

¶ 15. The rule of comity will prevent recovery in Michigan upon a claim bought for the purpose of assisting the original creditor of the principal debtor in evading the exemption laws of a sister state.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

§ 6. Filing or recording laws.

¶ 16. Laws for recording chattel mortgages can have no force beyond the jurisdiction of the sovereignty enacting them. The record of a chattel mortgage in Canada is therefore no notice to the creditors of the mortgagor who shall find the property in his possession in Michigan.—Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

¶ 17. The filing of a chattel mortgage in another state has no extraterritorial force.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 18. Where a chattel mortgage given by a resident of Canada was properly put upon record as required by the Canadian law, but the mortgagor was left in possession of the mortgaged property, and brought the same into this state, where it was taken and sold on execution against the mortgagor, it was held that the title under the execution sale must prevail over that under the mortgage.—Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143.

¶ 19. Where chattels are mortgaged in another state and left in the mortgagor's possession, and he brings them into Michigan, the record of the mortgage in the other state is not notice to purchasers.—Boydson v. Goodrich, 49 Mich. 65.

¶ 20. The recording of a chattel mortgage in another state followed by the removal of the property into this state is ineffectual to create a priority in Michigan, since the recording laws of the former state have no extraterritorial force.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 21. A chattel mortgage on horses, given in Canada by the owner of a half interest in them, and filed in Canada by the mortgagee, who takes possession of the horses, and puts them in the care of the keeper of a hotel at a race track, to hold possession for him, gives such mortgagee a better right to such interest in the horses after they have been taken without his consent from the custodian, and shipped to Michigan, by the owners of the other half interest in the horses, who did not know of his mortgage, than the latter can assert under another chattel mortgage from the same mortgagor, which they took in Michigan before the horses went to Canada, and filed in Michigan after their return.—Vining v. Millar, 109 Mich. 205.

¶ 22. A voluntary assignee under a foreign law may, if the title has passed to him, sue here for conversion against his assignor, who withholds the assets assigned.—Burrows v. Keays, 37 Mich. 430.

¶ 23. Proceedings by a Canadian court under the Canadian insolvent act had against a person while he was in this state cannot, by mere force or operation of the orders and decrees therein made, and in the absence of any transfer by the insolvent himself, vest the Canadian assignee with title to promissory notes in this state, which have never been within the territorial jurisdiction of the Canadian court or subjected by any process to its control; and the fact that the insolvent afterwards went to Canada and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that court would not help the matter.—Wood v. Parsons, 27 Mich. 159.

¶ 24. Defendant, a citizen of New York, made a note in June, 1858, payable to the order of other citizens at a bank in that state, four months after date. Before maturity the note was indorsed for a valuable consideration to the plaintiffs, a Massachusetts corporation. In 1859 the defendant, still residing in New York, was discharged under the insolvent laws of that state. Whether this discharge is a bar to a suit brought on the note in Michigan by the indorsee, quære.—Brighton Market Bank v. Merrick, 11 Mich. 405.

§ 8. Foreign receiverships and administration.

Jurisdiction and place for administration, see Estates of Decedents, II.

[Note. By virtue of the rule that if title has passed to the assignee his right as title holder will be recognized (see ante ¶¶ 22, 23), the question will frequently depend on the existence of title in the foreign representative. Accordingly topics treating of the rights of representatives should be consulted, e. g., Assignments for Creditors; Bankruptcy; Estates of Decedent; Receivers; Corporations, XXIII; Foreign Corporations, I.

¶ 25. A receiver appointed in another state will be permitted to bring an action here for the purpose of collecting the insolvent's assets for distribution in accordance with the laws of the jurisdiction within which he has been appointed; but this rule of comity is not allowed to operate when it will contravene the rights of a citizen of this state.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 119.

§ 9. Service of process.

Force and territorial scope of process, see also Process.

¶ 27. The lex loci contractus determines the nature and legal quality of the act done; whether it constitutes a contract; the nature and validity, obligation and legal effect of such contract; and furnishes the rule of construction and interpretation.—Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 450.

¶ 28. The validity of a contract made in another state and payable there will be determined by the law of that state.—Collins Iron Co. v. Burkam, 10 Mich. 283.

¶ 29. Where a contract made in another state is usurious, but the law of that state does not avoid it on that ground, but only affects the remedy upon it, the courts of this state can enforce the contract, but only by those remedies afforded by our own law. —Collins Iron Co. v. Burkam, 10 Mich. 283.

¶ 30. A contract for the payment of money made and to be executed in a foreign country would be payable in the lawful money of that country, whether so expressed in the contract or not.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338.

¶ 31. New York business usages cannot apply to a foreign bill drawn and indorsed in Michigan and payable in Chicago.—Stringfield v. Vivian, 63 Mich. 681.

¶ 32. Questions as to the liability of the parties to Minnesota promissory notes are to be determined in accordance with the law of Minnesota.—Hitchcock v. Frackelton, 116 Mich. 487.

¶ 33. The validity of an assignment of a life insurance policy issued by a foreign company, is to be determined by the laws of Michigan, when it is made there and is to be enforced there.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

¶ 34. A policy of insurance issued by a foreign insurance company to cover property in this state, which is valid as a contract in the state where made, is valid in this state even though it cannot be enforced in the courts of this state by such company because of its noncompliance with the laws of this state.—Swing v. § 11. ——Foreign law not in evidence.

Presumptions and evidence as to foreign law, see Evidence, II, III, VI, VIII.

¶ 35. Where suit is brought upon a foreign contract, and no proof is made in regard to the foreign law, the court will test the validity of the contract by the laws of this state. —Jones v. Palmer, 1 D. 379.

§ 12. Stipulation as to controlling law.

Public policy of stipulations for other laws, see Contracts, IV.

¶ 36. An assignment for creditors executed in another state but with express reference to Michigan, and intended to have its first operation in Michigan, is to be treated in determining its validity as if made in Michigan.—Richardson v. Rogers, 45 Mich. 591.

¶ 37. An insurance policy cannot be regarded as a Michigan contract or as governed by the laws of this state, notwithstanding the application for insurance may have been made in Michigan, if it appears in the by-laws indorsed on the policy that the application would be of no force until approved at the insurance office in another state, and if the application provides that the contract should be considered as entered into in such other state and governed by the laws thereof. —Voorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 91 Mich. 469.

¶ 38. A contract of a building and loan association dated in a foreign state, made payable in such state, and which expressly states that it is subject to the laws of such state, is clearly a contract of the foreign state, although the other party to the contract is a resident of this state and a loan on land in this state is involved.—Russell v. Pierce, 121 Mich. 208.

§ 13. Place of contract as criterion.

See also numerous paragraphs, post in § 13 et seq., wherein it is stated which law governs, but in connection with descriptions of facts indicating the place of contract.

Various indicia as to place intended, see also post §§ 14-19.
Presumptions as to place, see Contracts, X; Evidence, II.
Presumption as to wrongful intent to evade statute, see also Contracts, IV, X.

¶ 39. Contracts must be construed and their validity determined by the law of the country where they were made, unless the contracting parties clearly appear to have had some other law in view.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Reed, 115 Mich. 71.

¶ 40. A foreign contract must be interpreted, and the contractual rights of the contending parties determined, according to the law of the place of the making of the contract, where there is nothing in the contract to indicate that the intention of the parties is otherwise.—Millar v. Hilton, 189 Mich. 635.

§ 14. ——Place of agreement or place of execution.

¶ 41. The place where the terms of a contract are agreed upon governs rather than the place where the evidences of agreement are executed.—Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561.

¶ 41a. A note and mortgage made in California in favor of parties in Michigan, payable at a bank in this state, and sent to such bank, such mortgage being upon real estate in this state, constituted a Michigan contract, and the mortgagee was entitled to the interest thereon computed according to the law of Michigan, notwithstanding the note called for the compounding of interest according to the rule in California; since no contract came into existence until such instruments were received and accepted by mortgagee.—Palmer v. Hill, 140 Mich. 468.

§ 15. ——Place for performance or payment.

As to bills and notes payable at agreed place, see post § 16.
Loans on real estate security, see post § 17.

¶ 42. Where a contract is made, and by its terms to be performed, in another state, the obligation created by it is primarily to be determined by the laws of that state.—Holdridge v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 16 Mich. 66.

¶ 43. A contract between a Michigan corporation and a citizen of this state for the sale of property here, to be here selected, weighed and delivered, is subject to our statute of frauds, and in construing it the residence of the corporation's agents or servants is immaterial.—Foster v. Lumbermen's Mining Co., 68 Mich. 188.

¶ 44. A contract for professional services between a citizen of this state and a foreign attorney will, in the absence of a special agreement as to compensation, be governed by the rate fixed by statute in the country in which the contract is made and is to be performed.—Dawson v. Peterson, 110 Mich. 431.

¶ 45. There is an Illinois contract of guaranty, where it is dated in Illinois, signed in Michigan, and mailed to the creditor in Illinois, in which latter state payments, if any, are to be made.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Reed, 115 Mich. 71.

¶ 46. A contract made in Massachusetts for the purchase of stock, and not showing any intention that it should be performed by the purchase of the stock in any other place, is to be regarded as having intended that it should be bought there, as it was in fact, and that it would be held there on margins secured by the principal's collateral held there.—Douglass v. Paine, 141 Mich. 485.

¶ 46a. A contract made in Massachusetts with a stockbroker there through a local agent in Michigan transmitting orders, and in all other respects performable in Massachusetts, is not to be regarded as performable in Michigan and governed by Michigan laws because of the fact that payment was receivable in Michigan through the local agent, where the principal had an equal right to pay in Massachusetts or elsewhere.—Douglass v. Paine, 141 Mich. 485.

§ 16. ——Place for payment of bills and notes.

Notes secured by land mortgage, see post § 17.
Payments on foreign building association stock as Michigan payments, see Building Associations ¶ 8.

¶ 47. A note, given and payable in a foreign state is governed by the laws thereof.—Finch v. Calkins, 183 Mich. 298.

¶ 48. The rights of the parties to a note executed in a foreign state by a resident of that state and payable to a bank in that state are governed by the laws of such foreign state.—City Bank & Trust Co. v. Atwood, 197 Mich. 116.

¶ 49. The negotiability of a note executed in one state and made payable in another is governed by the law of the latter.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

¶ 50. Notes executed and delivered in this state on Sunday, for goods sold and delivered here on that day, are governed by the laws of Michigan though dated on Monday and payable in Ohio where all the parties live, and they are void under How. St., § 2015. —Arbuckle v. Reaume, 96 Mich. 243.

¶ 51. Whether notes given elsewhere to be paid in Michigan may not bear such interest as is allowed by the laws of Michigan, quære.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

§ 17. ——Loans on real estate mortgages.

¶ 52. A resident of Michigan agreed with a resident of New York, in Michigan, upon the terms of a loan to be made to him by the latter, and executed and recorded a mortgage as security, which he took to New York, and on the objection of the mortgagee to receiving it without a note or bond, executed a note of even date with and conditioned the same as the mortgage as to payment, which note purported to have been made at the residence of the mortgagor, to whom the mortgagee paid the money in New York. Held, that the fact that the note was executed in New York did not invalidate the agreement, and in any event, the parties having agreed upon a rate of interest which was valid in the state where the borrower resided, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the parties must be presumed to have contracted with reference to the laws of that state.—Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561.

¶ 53. Where by the terms of a mortgage to a New York building and loan association on lands in Michigan, the loan was to be paid in New York but it was expected the money would be paid to the treasurer of the local branch at Muskegon, and most of it was paid to him, and though the association contended that the contract was a New York contract and must be governed by the laws of that state, the contract was not a New York contract.—National Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Burch, 124 Mich. 57.

¶ 54. A contract whereby money is loaned by a Minnesota building and loan association to a member who is a resident of Michigan, which loan is secured by a mortgage on Michigan property, but the contract to be performed in Minnesota is a Minnesota contract governed by the laws of that state.—Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Mason, 127 Mich. 676.

¶ 55. Building and loan contracts, which are secured on Michigan lands and payable there are regarded as loans, classed as Michigan contracts, and subject to Michigan usury laws.—Hoskins v. Rochester Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 133 Mich. 505.

¶ 56. A building association loan contract is a Michigan contract when executed by residents to the local agents of a foreign association on local property and with payments to be made to the local agent, notwithstanding the articles make no provision for local representation.—Cobe v. Summers, 143 Mich. 117.

§ 18. ——Offer or order in one state and acceptance in another.

Place of accepting goods as test, see post § 19.

Sale in one state on orders taken in another as interstate commerce, see Commerce, §§ 4, 5.

Place where and when title passes, see Sales, IV.

¶ 57. The agent of a foreign liquor-selling establishment obtains an order which he sends to his employers for approval. Held, that there is no completed contract until the order is approved and accepted, and that if that is done outside of the state it is a foreign contract, and not void as in violation of the liquor law of Michigan.—Kling v. Fries, 33 Mich. 275; Monaghan v. Reid, 40 Mich. 665.

¶ 58. Where an order is sent by mail from Detroit to a city in another state in pursuance of which intoxicating liquors are there shipped to the person giving the order, and are afterwards received by him at Detroit, the contract is not a Michigan one and it is not affected by our statute.—Webber v. Donnelly, 33 Mich. 469.

¶ 59. Where a dealer in Ohio receives in Michigan an oral order for goods, above the value of $50, which he ships accordingly, the contract is not a Michigan one, and is governed by the law of the place of contract.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, 70 Mich. 583. [Note. An inaccuracy appears in this opinion. It does not appear thereby that any part of the contract was made in Ohio, and the court speaks of the place of "shipment," which was in Kentucky.—Editor.]

¶ 60. Where goods are orally ordered by sample in another state, to be shipped to Michigan, the fact that the purchaser is to have the privilege of examining the goods before paying for them, to see whether they are like the samples, does not make the transaction a Michigan contract, subject to the Michigan statute of frauds, but the sale is complete and title passes upon the delivery of the goods to the carrier.—Kuppenheimer v. Wertheimer, 107 Mich. 77.

¶ 61. A Massachusetts contract is shown by an order given in Michigan to the local agent of a Boston stockbroker for the sale of certain stock wherewith to purchase other stock, and by evidence that the local agent lacked authority to bind his superiors at Boston in the agreement to make the purchase and that he merely forwarded an order to them which they executed.—Douglass v. Paine, 141 Mich. 485.

¶ 62. An oral sale of goods above the value of $50 to be shipped from another state, and so shipped according to agreement, is thereby completed according to the common law, which presumably is in force in such state.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, 70 Mich. 583.

¶ 63. Where an order for corporate stock was given in Michigan to an Illinois corporation and accepted in Illinois by telegraph, its validity is determinable by the laws of Illinois.—Dudley A. Tyng & Co. v. Converse, 180 Mich. 195.

§ 19. ——Orders completed by acceptance within state.

¶ 64. A bargain was made in New York for liquors which had been sent to Michigan, the purchaser to pay freight and be allowed "outage." The purchaser examined the liquors in Michigan, and took them; and it was held that the contract was to be regarded as made in, and subject to the laws of, Michigan.—Myers v. Carr, 12 Mich. 63.

¶ 65. Where an order for liquors is taken in Michigan by the vendor in person, and the goods are afterwards shipped from Ohio and delivered to the vendee in Michigan, the contract is a Michigan one; and whether the contract of sale be executory, or actually completed by delivery, it is equally invalid under the prohibitory liquor law.—Webber v. Howe, 36 Mich. 150.

¶ 66. An oral order for liquors was given in Michigan to the agent of a Wisconsin firm, subject to the approval of the firm, and to the acceptance or rejection of the goods on their arrival in Michigan. The Wisconsin statute of frauds avoids all oral contracts of sale involving more than $50 unless the buyer accepts and receives a part of the goods. Held that, under the agreement as to their acceptance, the delivery of the liquors to a carrier in Wisconsin did not complete the sale as a Wisconsin contract within the meaning of the statute, and that as a Michigan contract it was void under the prohibitory liquor law.—Rindskopf v. De Ruyter, 39 Mich. 1.

§ 20. Distinct or separate contracts and sales.

Assignments, indorsements and acceptances as separate contracts, see post §§ 21, 22.

¶ 67. Oral negotiations made in Michigan with the agent of a foreign liquor-selling company for the sale of liquor to a resident of the state are not sufficient under the statute of frauds to cover subsequent orders sent to the foreign firm, and such orders, therefore, are not within the provisions of the Michigan law avoiding liquor contracts.—Roethke v. Phillip Best Brewing Co., 33 Mich. 340.

§ 21. ——Contract and assignment of it.

¶ 68. The validity of an assignment of an insurance policy issued by a foreign company is to be determined by the laws of the state where made and attempted to be enforced.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

§ 22. ——Negotiable instruments and contracts of indorsement or acceptance.

Validity of note where consideration is valid in other state, see Contracts, IV.

¶ 69. The law of the place where a note is made payable determines the time and mode of presentment, and of proceedings on nonpayment; but the notice to the indorser must be according to the law of the place where the indorsement was made.—Snow v. Perkins, 2 Mich. 238.

¶ 70. Where authority was given in New York for drawing in Illinois bills of exchange payable in New York, it was held that the law of New York controlled the obligations of the persons giving such authority.—Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 450.

§ 23. Foreign releases.

¶ 71. A release given in another state, and having special effect under one of its statutes, must have the same effect here, unless this would conflict with our laws or the rights of our citizens. And there need be no reference in the release to the statute under which it is given; and if there should be an erroneous one it would be surplusage.—Holdridge v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 16 Mich. 66.

¶ 72. If by the statute of a state where a contract is made it is permitted to release one joint debtor without releasing the others, a release given there will have the same effect here, and recovery may be had against the others for the unpaid balance.—Holdridge v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 16 Mich. 66.

§ 24. Personal property in general.

Recognition of rights and exemptions under foreign laws, see ante I.

Law governing devolution on death, see post IV.

Conveyances of personalty, see post § 25.

¶ 73. Intangible property, like stock, always follows the domicile, unless separated from it by positive law.—Howell v. Village of Cassopolis, 35 Mich. 471.

¶ 74. The title to personalty under a foreign transaction of married parties domiciled in Michigan would, in a Michigan court, be governed by Michigan laws.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530.

§ 25. Conveyances, transfers and liens of personalty.

Effect of foreign record or filing of chattel mortgage or lien, see ante § 6.

¶ 75. One may make conveyances in his own state, in accordance with its laws, of his personalty in another state, and the courts of the latter, where there are no statutes in the way, will accord the same respect to it which it would receive in the former state.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

§ 26. Voluntary assignments for creditors.

Of realty for creditors, see post § 30.

Recognition of foreign liquidator, see ante §§ 7, 8.

¶ 76. A voluntary assignment, under a foreign insolvent law, of all one's property, is sufficient to pass title to the assignee and enable him to enforce it against the assignor and wrong-doer.—Burrows v. Keays, 37 Mich. 430.

¶ 77. A common-law assignment, with preferences, made in New York, by a debtor living there to a Michigan assignee, and valid in New York, is not made invalid for Michigan by How. St., § 8739, which forbids preferences, but which applies only to assignments made in Michigan, and has no extraterritorial force.—Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62.

III. REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCES.

§ 27. Title and ownership in general.

Law governing devolution on death, see post IV.

¶ 78. The legal status of persons in relation to real estate is to be determined by the law of the place where the lands are situated though their rights are determined by a contract of another state.—Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 264.

§ 28. Conveyances and transfers or liens.

Effect of stipulations in loan contract for law of given state, see ante § 12.

Place of the contract of loan on land security, see ante § 17.

¶ 79. Conveyances of realty are governed by the laws which prevail where it lies.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

¶ 80. The lex rei sitae determines what covenants are customary in a deed to fulfil a land contract.—Gault v. Van Zile, 37 Mich. 22.

§ 29. Contracts relating to land.

Contracts relating to land, but not partaking of its fixity, see ante, II.

¶ 81. A contract relating to land lying within the state made between residents thereof is a Michigan contract, although executed by one of the parties in a foreign state while temporarily residing therein.—Barras v. Youngs, 185 Mich. 496.

§ 30. Voluntary assignments for creditors.

Assignments for creditors relating to personalty, see ante § 26.

¶ 82. A voluntary assignment by a foreign insolvent debtor of real property situated in this state will not be postponed to the rights of an attaching home creditor.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

IV. DESCENT, SUCCESSION AND WILLS.

§ 31. In general.

¶ 83. Where the owner of property dies intestate his real property devolves according to the law of the state in which it is situated, but his personal estate is distributed according to the law of his domicile.—Colvin v. Jones, 194 Mich. 670.

¶ 84. A will of personal property, regularly made according to the forms and solemnities required by the law of the testator's domicile, is sufficient to pass such property in every other country in which the same is situate.—In re High, 2 D. 515.

¶ 85. A foreign testator who orders his Michigan estate to be invested in lands in another state must be presumed to have intended to submit to the jurisdiction and laws of that state.—Ford v. Ford, 80 Mich. 42.

§ 32. Administration and probation of wills.

Jurisdiction and place for administration, and rights of domiciliary and ancillary administrators, see Estates of Decedents.

Jurisdiction to construe will affecting land in another state, see Courts, V.
Following construction given by other court, see Courts, IV.
Conclusiveness of foreign judgments as to domicile, see Foreign Judgments.

¶ 86. The rights of executors in and control over lands in a state other than that of testator's domicile as given by a will must be determined by the law of the state in which the land is situated.—Fuller v. McKim, 187 Mich. 667.

V. TORTS, PENALTIES AND CRIMES.

§ 33. In general.

Contractual or penal nature of stockholders' liability by statute, see also post ¶ 94.
Penal nature of foreign statute giving cause of action, see also Actions, ¶ 36.
Jurisdiction over extraterritorial transitory causes, see Courts, V.
Jurisdiction and place for prosecution of crime committed on, near or partly on both sides of boundary, see Indictment, III.

¶ 87. The liability of a corporation engaged in constructing a tunnel under a river between Michigan and Ontario, and employing an overseer on each side, in an action for injuries to an employee alleged to have been due to its negligence in allowing him to enter upon work in compressed air on the Canadian side of the tunnel at a higher pressure than that to which he had been accustomed on the American side, without warning him of the increased danger, is to be determined by the laws of Canada, although the employee was sent to the Canadian side by direction of the American foreman.—Turner v. St. Clair Tunnel Co., 111 Mich. 578.

¶ 88. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9518, providing that "no action shall be brought" on assurance or representation of credit unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged or his agent, no action will lie in Michigan for fraud and deceit in an unsigned financial statement used to secure a loan in New York.—Third Nat. Bank of New York v. Steel, 129 Mich. 434.

§ 34. Statutory causes of action; death by wrongful act.

Application of statute of limitations to action for death by wrongful act, see post ¶ 109.
Enforceability of foreign cause of action, see Death by Wrongful Act.

¶ 89. The liability of an employer for negligence causing the death of an employee, is governed by the law of the state or country where the injury took place.—Rick v. Saginaw Bay Towing Co., 132 Mich. 237.

¶ 90. A Canadian statute making an employer liable for injury caused by the negligence of a fellow servant "who has any superintendence entrusted to him whilst in the exercise of such superintendence," or caused by the negligence of a fellow servant "to whose orders or directions the workman at the time of the injury was bound to conform and did conform, where such injury resulted from his having so conformed," is not contrary to the public policy of this state and will govern an action for injury causing death which occurred in Canada.—Rick v. Saginaw Bay Towing Co., 132 Mich. 237.

¶ 91. The rule that where an accident causing injury occurred in a foreign state, the case will be ruled by the lex loci, applied in an action for the death of a passenger by being thrown through the door of a vestibule between Pullman cars, while the train was running in Illinois; the authorities of that state holding that the Pullman Company was liable, reviewed and distinguished from the case in question.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

VI. STATUS AND PERSONAL RELATIONS.

Privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, see Constitutional Law, X.

§ 35. Corporations and their members.

Rights in stocks, see also ante § 24.
Recognition and admission of foreign corporations, see Foreign Corporations, I; Insurance, II.

¶ 92. Whatever advantages may exist in affiliation with other associations, the rights of Michigan corporations must be governed by the laws of Michigan, and corporate privileges cannot be destroyed in violation of them.—Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of A. O. F., 62 Mich. 110.

¶ 93. One who becomes a member of a foreign corporation subjects himself to such laws of the government of its situs as affect its powers and obligations; so, an assessment against a Michigan member of a Minnesota mutual fire insurance company may be enforced in our courts because legal under Minnesota laws as interpreted by Supreme Court of that state, although it includes an item that would invalidate it here if the contract were considered a Michigan one.—Warner v. Delbridge & Cameron Co., 110 Mich. 590.

¶ 94. The individual liability under Kansas laws of stockholders in Kansas corporations is enforceable in our courts, being contractual, not penal.—Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 669.

§ 36. Marriage and divorce.

Effect of coverture under other laws, see post § 37.
Validity and recognition of foreign marriages and divorces, see Marriage; Divorce, XI.
Jurisdictional domicile and status for purpose of divorce, see Divorce, I.

§ 37. Coverture; disabilities.

Marital rights in personalty, see also ante ¶ 74.

¶ 95. In attachment between residents of Kansas, where the subject matter was a note made in Kansas by a wife for a debt of her husband, the law of Kansas governed, and thereunder the action at law in this state was proper and recourse to equity was not essential.—State Bank of Eldorado v. Maxson, 123 Mich. 250.

¶ 96. Under section 17 of the Married Woman's Act of Kansas, providing that any woman who shall have married out of the state shall, if her husband afterwards becomes a resident of the state, enjoy all the rights as to property which she may have acquired by the laws of any other state, etc., a Kansas creditor may by attachment against a Kansas married woman enforce her liability in this state, on a Kansas note given for a debt of her husband, although she would not have been liable in this state had the note been made here.—State Bank of Eldorado v. Maxson, 123 Mich. 250.

§ 38. Infants and guardianship.

Bastardy proceeding to affiliate child born out of state, see Bastards, § 4, ¶ 17.
Ancillary guardianship and recognition of foreign guardians, see also Guardianship.

¶ 97. The laws of Michigan usually contemplate the appointment of a guardian, who shall have custody of the estate, whoever may have custody of the person, and do not provide for corporation guardianships. They contemplate that guardians may be appointed for infants who have property in Michigan, whatever may be their residence, and only recognize foreign guardians as a matter of comity.—Rice's Case, 42 Mich. 528.

¶ 98. If a guardian has been appointed for an infant at a foreign domicile, and has had personal custody of the infant, his claims as guardian should be respected elsewhere; but this is not necessarily the case if he has no control of the infant's estate, and was appointed in a jurisdiction from which the infant was personally absent.—Rice's Case, 42 Mich. 528.

¶ 99. The parents of an infant were killed, and the child was injured, in a railway collision in Michigan while on their way from their former home in Philadelphia to Kansas, where they meant to reside. The child's property consisted chiefly in his right to compensation, and was therefore in Michigan, where he remained. A guardian, who was nearly related to him, was appointed for him in Michigan, where the guardian had charge of the estate, and another guardian, who was to have charge of the person only, was appointed for him in Philadelphia, where a trust corporation was made guardian of the estate. The guardian appointed in Philadelphia sought to obtain the custody of the child on a writ of habeas corpus. Held, that the foreign guardian was not entitled to it as a matter of right, and the writ was refused.—Rice's Case, 42 Mich. 528.

¶ 100. There is no rule of comity requiring recognition of the right of testamentary guardians qualified in the District of Columbia to the custody of a child living in Michigan, and claimed by guardians appointed in Michigan and better qualified to serve the child's welfare.—71 Mich. 180.

§ 39. Poor persons and settlement.

¶ 101. An order of an Iowa court made pursuant to statute of that state directing the removal of a pauper, who has not gained a legal settlement in that state, to Michigan, her former place of residence, is no justification to the person who executes it, if such removal is in violation of the statutes of this state.—Superintendents of Poor of Newaygo County v. Nelson, 75 Mich. 154.

VII. REMEDIES AND PROCEDURE.

§ 40. In general.

Statutory rights and causes of action under foreign laws, see ante §§ 4, 34.
Territorial operation of garnishment laws, see also ante ¶ 14.

Remedies for enforcement of contract usurious but not void where made, see ante ¶ 29.
Jurisdiction of courts over foreign causes or persons, see Courts, V.
Jurisdictional domicile and situs of estates, see Estates of Decedents, II.
Evtrastate fraud as ground for arrest of fraudulent debtor, see Civil Arrest, § 22.
Conclusiveness and effect of foreign judgment, see Foreign Judgments, II; Former Adjudication.
Domestic law of procedure, see specific topics, e. g., Pleading; Trial; etc.

¶ 102. The form of action is governed by the law of the country where the action is brought.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

¶ 103. The law of the place where the remedy is sought to be enforced must govern as to the nature and form of that remedy.—Moses v. The Missouri, 1 Mich. 507.

¶ 104. Remedies are governed and applied according to the law of the place where the action is instituted, rather than by the law of the place of contract.—Millar v. Hilton, 189 Mich. 635.

¶ 105. Where a contract made and payable in another state is usurious, but the law of that state does not avoid it on that ground, but only affects the remedy upon it, the courts of this state can enforce the contract, but by no other remedies than those provided by our own law.—Collins Iron Co. v. Burkam, 10 Mich. 283.

¶ 106. A law of another state, if it had such a law, which would enable a vendor, of whom goods have been purchased fraudulently on credit, to maintain assumpsit for the price of the goods before the credit had expired, would be a law affecting the remedy only, and would not apply so as to enable the vendor to maintain a similar action in this state for the price of goods sold in New York.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

§ 41. Limitations.

General law of limitations, see Limitations of Actions.

¶ 107. The law of limitation of actions is a part of the lex fori.—Home L. Ins. Co. v. Elwell, 111 Mich. 689.

¶ 108. The fact that notes are barred by the statute of limitations of a foreign state, does not constitute a bar to an action in this state.—Blackburn v. Blackburn's Estate, 124 Mich. 190.

¶ 109. Where action is brought against a Michigan corporation for its negligence in Canadian waters whereby death was caused there, the liability being established and the remedy being provided by Canadian statute, the right of action if barred in Canada is barred here.—Wingert v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 395.

Conflict of laws with respect to application of statute of limitations in action for injury to passenger on interstate train, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 107-118.

§ 42. Evidence.

¶ 110. The law of the forum applies as to the admissibility of evidence by defendant, in action on a foreign contract, as to the making of a supplemental contract with a now deceased representative of plaintiff.—Rockford Malleable Iron Works v. Tilden, 188 Mich. 80.

§ 43. Judgments and confession of judgment.

General law of judgments, see Judgments.

¶ 111. An Ohio note with warrant of attorney in unlimited terms to confess judgment thereon will support an Ohio judgment confessed thereon in Ohio, though the warrant might be insufficient extraterritorially.—First Nat. Bank of Athens v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515.

¶ 112. A Michigan note with a warrant to confess judgment contained within it, and therefore invalid as a warrant because of Comp. L. 1897, § 10299, which requires a separate instrument, cannot support a judgment confessed in Illinois where both parties were nonresidents and where no process was issued.—Acme Food Co. v. Kirsch, 166 Mich. 433.

CONSOLIDATION AND SEVERANCE OF ACTIONS.

TREATS of the procedure and occasion for consolidating several actions into one or for severing one into several (Jud. Act, Chap. VIII; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12309, 12310). It excludes the hearing together of several distinct causes in one trial or hearing (see Equity, VIII; Trial, II) and the setting out of issues of fact to be tried separately before or after the main issues in the case (see Equity, VIII, B; Trial, II).

Analysis.

§ 1. Consolidation.
§ 2. ——Compatibility of the actions.
§ 3. ——Procedure; amendments.
§ 4. Severance.

[The New Federal Equity Rule 27, providing for the joinder in one bill of diverse causes of action in equity and for separate trials of issues on grounds of convenience, is somewhat similar to the provisions of Comp. L. 1915, § 12309, and the federal equity decisions upon that rule may afford persuasive precedents on the applicability and effect of the state statute.—Editor.]

§ 1. Consolidation.

Of appeals or writs of error, see Appeal, § 141.
Presumption on appeal as to consolidation or severance, see Appeal, § 866.

¶ 1. The court should of its own motion order consolidation of proceedings that are between the same parties and include parts of the same account, and which, under the statute, cannot be made the subjects of cross-actions.—Wisner v. Mabley's Estate, 70 Mich. 271.

¶ 2. A consolidation of a foreclosure suit with one to enforce a trust for security of a guaranty of the mortgage is not erroneous because the effect of it will be to deprive the defendant guarantor of the right to file a cross-bill against a coguarantor for contribution, where the right to an action at law for contribution will remain and it appears that the defendant might by moving in time have interposed a cross-bill in each of the suits which were consolidated.—Miller v. Walker, 141 Mich. 433.

§ 2. ——Compatibility of the actions.

¶ 3. Whether actions upon various promissory notes to which defendants' names are attached in different relations to each other and to the other parties can be consolidated, quære.—Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490.

¶ 4. The consolidation of cross-actions is not authorized at common law or by statute; nor are parties allowed to stipulate that the same jury shall hear in one case and decide by one verdict a series of incompatible issues which cannot be tried together without violating the fundamental principles of procedure.—Harris v. Sweetland, 48 Mich. 110.

§ 3. ——Procedure; amendments.

¶ 5. Defendants to a bill for the enforcement of a trust to secure the guaranty of payment of a mortgage, consolidated with one for the foreclosure of the mortgage, need not be made parties to the foreclosure suit by amendment, where their rights are fully protected by the consolidation except that by proceeding to amend and bring them in they would have gained more time.—Miller v. Walker, 141 Mich. 433.

¶ 6. Where a man and his wife were jointly sued on a note, and it appeared from the finding of facts that the wife signed as surety only and that the statute of limitations had run against her, a formal discontinuance as to her was held unnecessary, and a severance and the entry of separate judgments were sustained.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123.

CONSPIRACY.

¶ 1. A combination of persons formed for the purpose of injuring the business of another is illegal, and many acts committed by the combination are illegal which would not be illegal if committed by an individual.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 2. A civil action for conspiracy will not lie unless the illegal purpose is so far carried out as to damage plaintiff unlawfully.—Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 572.

§ 2. Manner or means of conspiracy.

Pleading the means, see post § 5.

¶ 3. Threats in language are not the only threats recognizable in law as a means of conspiracy to intimidate or oppress in trade, but covert and unspoken threats may be just as effective as spoken threats.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 4. The law recognizes and gives full force to threats pursuant to a conspiracy to intimidate and destroy trade though they are not spoken and are not accompanied by violence.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

§ 3. ——Combinations, boycotts and the like.

Illegal combinations, see Combinations.
Actionable statutory or common law combinations, see Combinations, ¶ 23.

¶ 5. Persons may organize, and persuade and induce others to join them, but when they resort to unlawful means to cause injury to others with whom they have no relation, contractual or otherwise, the limit permitted by the law is passed, and they may be restrained.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 6. A boycott is a combination of persons to cause a loss to a third person by causing others against their will to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse, through threats that unless a compliance with their demands be made, the persons forming the combination will cause loss or injury to him; or an organization formed to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation, and other acts which tend to violence, and thereby cause him, through fear of resulting injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 7. A combination formed for the purpose of injuring a person in his trade or occupation is an indictable offense.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 8. A combination to do injurious acts, expressly directed to another by way of intimidation or constraint, either of himself or of persons employed or seeking to be employed by him, is outside of allowable competition and unlawful.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 9. Intimidation, within the meaning of the law, is not necessarily limited to threats of violence to person or property.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 10. The boycott condemned by law is not alone that accompanied by violence and threats of violence, but that where the means used are threatening in their nature and intended, and naturally tend to overcome, by fear of loss of property, the will of others, and compel them to do things which they would not otherwise do.—Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497.

¶ 11. The picketing of an employer's premises in order to intercept employees and customers, is unlawful, an act of intimidation, and an unwarranted interference with the right of free trade.—Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497.

§ 4. Persons liable.

Evidence of participation, see post § 6.
Instruction as to complicity and liability, see post ¶ 30.

¶ 12. When a person is shown to have become a party to an illegal combination or conspiracy, he is liable for all the acts performed by any of his coconspirators in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 13. Defendants who have conspired to perpetrate a fraud on plaintiff are responsible for false representations made in furtherance of that scheme though such representations were not authorized by all the defendants.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

§ 5. Actions, pleading and variance.

Remedies for fraud accomplished by conspiracy, see Fraud, III.
Injunctions against conspiracies and boycotts, see also Injunctions, II.

¶ 14. A declaration in a suit for conspiracy to prevent the enforcement of a judgment is insufficient in merely alleging that the defendant "did knowingly and wilfully and unlawfully oppose and obstruct the said sheriff in attempting to execute said writ," if the record does not show the manner and circumstances under which he did so; and an allegation of injury which merely declares that defendant "delayed and obstructed plaintiff in the collection of the judgment," and put him to great expense in removing the obstructions, is fatally defective in presenting no issuable facts, and is open to the inference that the judgment may have been collected, and is also consistent with methods of obstruction and delay, some of which would not be actionable.—Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 572.

¶ 15. In a declaration in case for a conspiracy to prevent the trial of pending suits it is insufficient to aver merely that, by "divers false pretenses, subtle means and devices," defendants have "prevented and defeated the trial of said cause"; nor is it sufficient to refer to threats, as a means employed, without showing their tenor; a mere averment that they are unlawful is not enough.—Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 572.

¶ 16. In an action for damages for obtaining a settlement by means of a fraudulent assignment for benefit of creditors and certain fraudulent mortgages, the declaration should, as against the mortgagees, allege that the assignment and the mortgages were made with the mortgagee's knowledge, and should aver a conspiracy and enumerate the false statements, and if the statements were not made by all the defendants it should aver that they were authorized by all, and in furtherance of a common design, that they were believed and acted upon by plaintiffs, and that they induced the action taken by plaintiffs which resulted in damage to them.—Pforzheimer v. Selkirk, 71 Mich. 600.

¶ 17. Where plaintiff in a suit for damages for a fraudulent conspiracy, alleges that the organization of a certain corporation was a necessary step in the scheme of fraud by which she was victimized, and further alleges that a false statement was made by defendants in the articles of incorporation, said articles are admissible in evidence, and their admission is not open to the objection that plaintiff had no right to rely on statements in them, since they were not intended for the public. The reason for this is that plaintiff does not base her rights of action upon a false statement in the articles; she merely claims that the execution of the articles was a preliminary, but necessary, step in a scheme of fraud consummated by other steps subsequently taken.—Roy v. Bordas, 150 Mich. 242.

¶ 18. A variance does not exist in an action for conspiracy to defraud against an attorney and another person, where the affidavit for the capias and the declaration charges that a client of the attorney loaned money and received property as security, which was to be free from all incumbrances, on the ground that the evidence shows that the client knew of incumbrances, where the testimony in fact is that the client was unfamiliar with land transactions, and that she was induced to take a deed to property as security for a loan, on the assurance that the deed was better than a first mortgage, whereas a first mortgage on the premises was subsequently foreclosed depriving her of her security.—Hardy v. Trick, 121 Mich. 251.

¶ 19. In an action for damages for a fraudulent conspiracy, the declaration alleged that the formation of the corporation in which plaintiff was induced to invest was a necessary step in the scheme of fraud by which she was victimized, and further alleged that the corporation was organized under Act No. 232, Pub. Acts 1903, and that the articles of incorporation were executed under oath. As a matter of fact said articles were not executed under oath, and the statute does not require them to be so executed. Plaintiff on the trial offered in evidence said articles of incorporation, which were acknowledged before a notary public, as required by the statute. The trial judge struck them from the record on the ground that, as they were not executed under oath, there was a variance between them and their description in the declaration. Held, that this was error, for the legal effect of the articles conformed precisely to their description, and therefore there was no variance.—Roy v. Bordas, 150 Mich. 242.

Sufficiency to go to the jury, see post § 7.
Instruction as to amount of proof, see post ¶ 29.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Admissibility of acts of coconspirators against each other, see Evidence, VII, C.

¶ 20. In cases of conspiracies or combinations to commit a fraud all evidence must be held admissible which has any tendency to prove the conspiracy or combination, and its nature and objects, so far as these can have any bearing upon the issue on trial.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 21. In an action against the election inspectors of a village charging conspiracy on the part of the defendants to deprive the plaintiff of the office of village trustee to which he claimed to have been elected, by miscounting the ballots and by depriving him of a recount by failing to seal the ballot boxes, evidence held insufficient to show concerted action on the part of defendants to injure plaintiff as alleged.—Veriden v. McLeod, 180 Mich. 182.

¶ 22. An inference of conspiracy ought not be drawn lightly nor without a fair support of testimony.—Lyon v. Clark, 132 Mich. 521.

¶ 23. In an action for fraud where the declaration alleges a conspiracy by which plaintiff was induced to invest his money in the stock of a company, evidence that one of the defendants was on intimate terms with the defendants actively engaged in the fraud and that he represented to plaintiff that he would buy the stock at more than its face value, and that he profited financially by the fraud, justified the jury in finding that he was a party to the conspiracy.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 24. In an action by a wife against her husband's parents and another for conspiring to prevent her husband from living with her until she should recover certain property deeded to her in settlement of a former suit against defendants for alienation of her husband's affections, the court erred in refusing to permit plaintiff to give testimony as to the relationship of defendants to each other, and of acts of the defendant before the settlement wherein such testimony was offered, not to show that plaintiff had any cause of action for what occurred prior to and including the settlement, nor for the purpose of adding to the damages which plaintiff would be entitled to recover, but for the purpose of showing whether, in fact, the defendants were acting jointly in what was done subsequently to the settlement.—Rosenthal v. Rosenthal, 151 Mich. 493.

¶ 25. In an action for malicious prosecution against a city and numerous merchants the facts are held not to show a conspiracy on the part of the merchants in the prosecution of a transient trader for the violation of an ordinance requiring licenses.—James v. Sweet, 125 Mich. 132.

§ 7. Jury questions and instructions.

General law as to instructions and jury province, see Instructions; Trial, VI.

¶ 26. A question of fact as to whether an attorney and another person entered into a conspiracy to defraud a client of the attorney is presented by evidence showing that the client was induced to loan money to the person designated by the attorney believing that she would have security better than a first mortgage, and that the attorney subsequently foreclosed a mortgage on the property and deprived the client of her security, she being unacquainted with land transactions.—Hardy v. Trick, 121 Mich. 251.

¶ 27. In an action on the case for conspiracy to prevent plaintiff's husband from living with her, there was evidence that defendant Jacobs aided and abetted the other defendants in an attempt to compel plaintiff to accept a divorce or else deed back certain property, and that the other defendants made it uncomfortable for plaintiff to live with her husband. Held, there was evidence to go to the jury, of the alleged conspiracy.—Rosenthal v. Rosenthal, 154 Mich. 533.

¶ 28. Upon the question of conspiracy, in an action for criminal conversation, the law is correctly stated by an instruction that: "A common design or purpose by two or more persons is the essence of the charge of conspiracy, and this common design must be proved either by direct evidence or by proof of such circumstances as naturally tend to prove it, and sufficient in themselves to satisfy you of the existence of such common design, before you can find a conspiracy."—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

¶ 29. It is not error to refuse a request to charge that "it takes the same amount of proof to establish complicity of plaintiff" in an alleged fraud "that it would take to establish fraud against him if he were alone charged with it," where the jury was instructed that his complicity in the fraud must be established by a preponderance of the testimony.—Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225.

¶ 30. Where there is evidence tending to show a conspiracy or common purpose between two defendants to withhold from plaintiff the goods for the conversion of which suit is brought, an instruction that if they conspired or united in such common purpose both would be responsible for what each said and did in furtherance of that purpose is correct.—Cadwell v. Pray, 86 Mich. 266.

§ 8. Criminal conspiracy.

Conspiracy as a fact implicating several persons in a specific crime, such as embezzlement, is treated as a part of the objective crime, see Crimes, II.
Evidence of conspiracy to implicate as parties or to characterize the objective crime is treated in Indictment, VIII.

I. CONSTITUTIONS AND AMENDMENTS IN GENERAL.

[Note. Cross-references to the various provisions of the Constitution of 1908 are placed throughout the body of this topic. No references except those contained within the paragraphs themselves are made to earlier constitutions, but the corresponding sections of the earlier constitutions are all identified and can be readily found from the annotations to the Constitution of 1908 in volume 1, Compiled Laws of 1915.]

§ 1. Nature and object.

Temporary office of the Schedule, see post § 14.

¶ 1. Our present constitution was not the formation of a new government, but the continuation of a government formed under a previous constitution, whose supposed or real defects it was intended to correct.—Streeter v. Paton, 7 Mich. 341.

§ 2. Supersession of Ordinance of 1787.

Construction, operation and effect of the Ordinance in general, see State of Michigan, I.

Rights in public lands under the Ordinance, see Public Lands, I, IX.

¶ 2. The Ordinance of 1787, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river, is no part of the fundamental law of the state since its admission into the Union. It was then superseded by the state constitution; and such parts of it as are not to be found in the federal or state constitution were then annulled.—La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. City of Monroe, W. 155; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113, affirming 53 Mich. 593.

§ 3. Constitutional conventions and delegates.

Resort to debates in construing constitution, see post § 8.

Provisions for voting on constitutional convention at stated times, see Const., Art. XVII, § 4.

¶ 3. That provision of the Act No. 272, Pub. Acts 1907, providing for the constitutional convention of 1907, which directs a submission of a revision of the Constitution to the people at the spring election, is invalid.—Carton v. Secretary of State, 151 Mich. 337. (Grant, C. J., Blair, Carpenter, Moore and Ostrander, JJ., concurring. Montgomery, Hooker and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting, on the ground that the legislature had power to fix the date of submission.)

¶ 4. A member of the legislature which proposed the constitutional convention of 1907 is ineligible as a delegate to such convention, since his election is a "civil appointment" to another office during his term and obnoxious to Const. Art. IV, § 18.—Fyfe v. Kent County Clerk, 140 Mich. 349.

§ 4. Proposal and submission of amendments.

Construction of amendments, see post § 15.

Provisions as to proposal and adoption of amendments, see Const. Art. XVII, §§ 1-3.

¶ 5. Const., art. 20, § 1, relating to the submission of proposed amendments to the voters, being silent as to the method of submission, it was therefore subject to legislative control and direction.—People ex rel. Kent County Sup'rs v. Loomis, 135 Mich. 556.

¶ 6. A house journal entry of a resolution to amend Const., art. 10, § 10, providing a board of auditors for Wayne County, taken in connection with a subsequent entry reciting a two-thirds vote on concurrence in the amendment made by the senate, and that the title of the joint resolution as amended by the senate was agreed to; and the senate journal entry showing the resolution as passed by that body, constituted a full compliance with Const., art. 20, § 1, providing for the entry on the respective house journals, of amendments agreed to by both houses; it being apparent from the house journal that the house by its action first and last passed the identical resolution which passed the senate and appeared on its journal.—People ex rel. Kent County Sup'rs v. Loomis, 135 Mich. 556.

¶ 7. The power conferred upon the two houses of the legislature by the Constitution, art. 20, sec. 1, to submit a constitutional amendment to the electors and prescribe the manner of doing so cannot be restricted by any previous legislation.—Murphy Chair Co. v. Attorney General, 148 Mich. 563.

¶ 7a. Where the legislature regularly adopts by a two-thirds vote an amendment to the constitution and determines upon its submission to the people and prescribes the manner, it is exercising a constitutional function which cannot be restricted by previous legislation.—Murphy Chair Co. v. Attorney General, 148 Mich. 563.

¶ 8. The constitutional amendment striking out section 3 of article 18 was legally submitted to the electors and adopted by them in accordance with the joint resolution of March 6, 1907, although the procedure prescribed by Pub. Acts 1905, No. 23, was not followed.—Murphy Chair Co. v. Attorney General, 148 Mich. 563.

¶ 9. The joint resolution agreed to March 6, 1907, providing for a form of ballot for a constitutional amendment to be submitted to the people covered the same ground attempted to be covered by Pub. Acts 1905, No. 23, and operated to substitute the notice prescribed in the resolution itself for that provided by the previous act.—Murphy Chair Co. v. Attorney General, 148 Mich. 563.

¶ 10. Section 3 of Article XVII of the Constitution, providing that amendments shall be printed "on a ballot or ballots," construed to require the use of separate ballots for each proposed amendment.—Livingstone v. Board Election Com'rs Wayne Co., 174 Mich. 485.

¶ 11. Under Const., art. 20, § 1, relating to the submission of proposed amendments to the voters, and Comp. L. 1897, § 3657, directing action by the election commissioners relating to the printing of ballots, it was not essential that an entire resolution be printed on the ballot and the following form was sufficient: "Amendment to the constitution providing a board of County Auditors for the counties of Saginaw, Jackson, Washtenaw and Kent."—People ex rel Kent County Sup'rs v. Loomis, 135 Mich. 556.

§ 5. ——Time for submission.

¶ 12. The requirement that constitutional amendments must be submitted at the "next general election" after they were proposed meant the biennial November election for state officers, until 1876, when the requirement was changed to permit submission at both spring and fall elections.—Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265.

¶ 13. The constitutional amendment of 1875-1876, abolishing the anti-license clause of the constitution was validly submitted and adopted at "the next general election."—Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265.

¶ 14. The Constitution providing that amendments proposed by the legislature be submitted at the "next spring or autumn election," it is the duty of the legislature to submit amendments proposed by it at one of the two general elections occurring during its term, and where the spring election of an odd year has passed, the amendment proposed by a joint resolution of the legislature must be submitted at the autumn election. —Chase v. Board Election Com'rs Wayne Co., 151 Mich. 407.

¶ 15. Properly construed, section 1, art. 20 of the Constitution implies that constitutional amendments must be submitted either at the spring election of the odd years or the fall election of the even years, and Joint Resolution No. 34, passed in 1907, proposing an amendment to section 10, art. 14 of the Constitution, and that the same be submitted to the people at the election to be held on the first Monday of April, 1908, is ineffective. —Chase v. Board Election Com'rs Wayne Co., 151 Mich. 407.

Provisions relating to power to alter or repeal charters, see post § 289.
State construction of state constitution as binding on federal courts, and federal construction of federal constitution as binding on state courts, see Courts, IV.

¶ 16. For a discussion of the rules that should govern in construing a constitution. see the separate opinions of the justices in People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127.

¶ 17. The cardinal rule of construction concerning language is to apply to it that meaning which it would naturally convey to the popular mind in all cases where the propriety of such construction is not negatived by some settled rule of law.—People v. Dean, 14 Mich. 406.

¶ 18. The object of construction as applied to a written constitution is to ultimately ascertain and give effect to the intent of the people in adopting it.—Kearney v. State Board of Auditors, 189 Mich. 666.

¶ 19. Constitutions are to be construed strictly, especially in determining the restrictions which they place upon legislatures.—Brooks v. Hydorn, 76 Mich. 273.

¶ 20. In construing the state constitution it should be given the meaning the people intended it should have. It should be construed, if its language be appropriate, so that it will accomplish the purpose the people intended it should accomplish.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

¶ 21. A constitutional provision in contravention of the common law should not be extended by construction; so held of art. 16, § 5, as to the property rights of married women.—Brown v. Fifield, 4 Mich. 322.

¶ 22. A written constitution—e. g., that of the United States—is not subject to growth or modification except by the prescribed agencies and in the prescribed methods.—McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377, affirmed 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3.

§ 7. ——As a whole.

Of amendments with instrument as a whole, see post § 15.
Of election provisions, see also post ¶ 1083.

¶ 23. Constitutional provisions must be construed with reference to each other when relating to the same subject-matter.—Root v. Mayor, 3 Mich. 433; Dullman v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392.

¶ 24. In construing a section of the constitution effect must be given to the section taken as a whole.—Vetter v. Fowler, 167 Mich. 499.

§ 8. ——Resort to extraneous matters; constitutional debates.

Contemporaneous and prior facts and laws, see post § 9.

¶ 25. The court may not limit the apparent scope of the prohibition contained in Const., art. 18, § 3, which forbids the practical as well as theoretical teaching of certain mechanical trades to convicts, by any evidence of limitation found only outside of the constitution.—Manthey v. Vincent, 145 Mich. 327.

¶ 26. For the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the people in adopting a constitution, resort may be had to the proceedings of the convention which framed it.—Kearney v. State Board of Auditors, 189 Mich. 666.

§ 9. ——Contemporaneous and precedent conditions and laws.

See also post ¶ 46.

Common law test as measuring right to arrest without warrant, see post ¶ 619.

¶ 27. Constitutions are to be construed as the people construed them in their adoption, if possible; and the public history of the times should be consulted, and should have weight in arriving at that construction.—People ex rel. Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499.

¶ 28. Constitutions, as well as statutes, are to be construed in the light of previous history and surrounding circumstances; their language is not to be measured by mathematical rules merely, but is subject, in the nature of things, to numerous implied exceptions or qualifications.—People ex rel. Kennedy v. Gies, 25 Mich. 83.

¶ 29. Constitutional provisions must be interpreted with reference to the times and circumstances under which the constitution was formed, and the general spirit of the times and the sentiments prevailing among the people.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 481.

¶ 30. Our present constitution was not the formation of a new government, but the continuation of a government formed under a previous constitution, whose supposed or real defects it was intended to correct; and in construing it we are bound to look to the distribution of judicial powers under the old constitution, and to discover, if we can, the evil, if any, arising from that distribution, and intended to be corrected by the new constitution.—Streeter v. Paton, 7 Mich. 341.

¶ 31. The framers of a constitution are presumed to have a knowledge of existing laws, and to act in reference to that knowledge.—People ex rel. Hughes v. May, 3 Mich. 598.

¶ 32. A constitutional provision will be construed by reference to the state of the law or custom existing at the time of adoption.—Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of Detroit, 118 Mich. 560.

¶ 33. A constitutional provision cannot be construed to mean one thing at the time of its adoption and another thing subsequently when public sentiments have undergone a change.—Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of Detroit, 118 Mich. 560.

¶ 34. Contemporaneous history of the adoption of Const., art. 18, § 3, restricting convict manufactures, and the construction placed upon this provision by the state prison authorities, cannot be considered in interpreting such provision, when there is no doubt as to its true meaning.—Manthey v. Vincent, 145 Mich. 327.

¶ 35. A constitutional provision adopted from the constitution of another state cannot be said to have been adopted with the construction subsequently put upon it by the courts of that state.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

§ 10. ——Practical construction by legislature and officers.

Practical construction of statutes, see Statutes, V.

¶ 36. Where the language designating an officer is the same in a new constitution as in the old one, which had received both a popular and legislative construction, it must continue to receive the same unless the contrary intention plainly appears.—People ex rel. Hughes v. May, 3 Mich. 598.

¶ 37. The doctrine that "long and continued usage furnishes a contemporaneous construction which must prevail over the more technical import of words" should be applied more cautiously to constitutions than to laws and should not be applied except in cases of doubt.—Pingree v. Auditor General, 120 Mich. 95.

¶ 38. In determining the question of the power of the state assessors provided for by the amendment of 1900 to Const., art. 14, to determine the actual value of the property of the state for the purpose of fixing the rate to be levied upon railroad property, the contemporaneous construction placed by the legislature itself upon the amendment is not to be ignored.—Board of Education of Detroit v. State Board of Assessors, 133 Mich. 116.

§ 11. ——Consideration of results or possibilities.

See also post ¶ 47.

¶ 40. In ascertaining the intent of a constitutional provision, the object to be accomplished and the consequences that will follow a given construction, may be considered.—Bay County Sup'rs v. Edmunds, 139 Mich. 466.

¶ 41. The fear of disastrous consequences should not deter the court from an interpretation of Const., art. 18, § 3, prohibiting engagement of convict labor in certain trades, according to its obvious meaning, since the people can avert such consequences by amending the constitution.—Manthey v. Vincent, 145 Mich. 327.

§ 12. ——Implications and exceptions.

Statutes assailed as obnoxious to "principle," see post ¶ 60.

Implied exclusion of one department from field of others, see post II.

¶ 42. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius is not wholly inapplicable to the interpretation of constitutional provisions.—Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460, reversed in 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

¶ 43. If a prohibitory constitutional provision, general in its character, is subject to exceptions, those exceptions must be found in the constitution for the courts cannot create them. Courts can only declare the exceptions which the constitution creates.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

§ 13. ——Meaning of words and language.

See also ante ¶ 36, post ¶¶ 1083, 1150.

Disability of legislature to change definitions in constitution, see post § 94.

¶ 44. The first resort in all cases where a constitutional provision is to be interpreted is to the natural signification of the words employed in the order and grammatical arrangement in which the framers of the instrument have placed them, and if thus regarded, the words used convey a definite meaning, which involves no absurdity and no contradiction between different parts of the same writing, then the meaning apparent on the face of the instrument is the one which alone was intended to be conveyed, and in such case there is no room for construction.—Attorney General v. State Board of Assessors, 143 Mich. 73.

¶ 45. In construing a section of the constitution words must be given their usual and ordinary meaning.—Vetter v. Fowler, 167 Mich. 499.

¶ 46. Words and phrases in a new constitution that have been adopted from an old one must be considered as used according to their universally received and established import.—People ex rel. Hughes v. May, 3 Mich. 598.

¶ 47. A word not having a well-defined and technical meaning must be construed with reference to the evils to be prevented and the purposes to be accomplished, and in view of the history and practical construction of the provision in which it is used.—Kent County Agric. Soc. v. Houseman, 81 Mich. 609.

§ 14. ——Construction of schedule.

¶ 48. The schedule to the constitution was meant to provide for temporary purposes only, and its provisions cannot be given permanent effect where any other interpretation is reasonable.—People ex rel. Douvielle v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 585.

¶ 49. Local Acts 1895, No. 294, providing for the beginning of the term of office of the treasurer of Wayne County on July first next succeeding his election and to continue for two terms thereafter, was not forbidden by section 28 of the Schedule of the Constitution, providing that the terms of office of all state and county officers, etc., shall begin on the first day of January succeeding their election; as such Schedule was not intended as a permanent limitation of the power of the legislature to change the time for the terms of county officers to begin.—Hunt ex rel. Snow v. Buhrer, 133 Mich. 107.

¶ 50. Mandamus will not lie to compel the attorney general to file an information to enjoin a county board of auditors from approving warrants for the payment of their salary as increased by act of the legislature, where the petition is based on the theory that the act violates section 20 of the Schedule appended to the state constitution, providing that the legislature can not lawfully change the amount of compensation of any officer during the term for which he is elected or appointed. This section was adopted for temporary and not for permanent purposes.—Hudson v. Attorney General, 150 Mich. 67.

§ 15. ——Construction of amendments.

Provision relating to submission of amendments, see ante § 5.

Operation and effect of amendments, see post § 17.

Effect to alter relative functions of the three departments, see post § 33.

¶ 51. An amended section of the constitution must be construed with the whole of the instrument.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408.

§ 16. Operation and effect of constitution; retroaction.

Construction and meaning, see ante §§ 6-15.

Of the Schedule, see ante § 14.

Provisions of the Schedule for preserving existing status, see Const. Schedule, §§ 1-7.

Provisions for submission and vote on present constitution and for time of taking effect, see Const. Schedule, §§ 10, 11.

¶ 52. Section 1, Art. XII, of the Constitution of 1909, relating to the formation of or the conferring of rights, privileges and franchises on corporations, is prospective only in its operation.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

¶ 53. Rights acquired by an electric light and power company in the public streets of a city under Act No. 264, Pub. Acts 1905, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2941, were not abrogated or revoked by the adoption of section 28 of Art. VIII of the Constitution of 1909, prohibiting the granting of franchises, except by municipalities.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

§ 17. ——Of amendments.

Effect of Amendments XIV and XV of federal constitution on original provisions, see post ¶ 1158.

¶ 54. Under Const., art. 20, § 1, which provides for the submission of proposed constitutional amendments at the next spring or autumn election, such amendments take effect from the time of their ratification by the popular vote.—Seneca Mining Co. v. Osmun, 82 Mich. 573.

¶ 55. Laws of 1889, Act No. 120 (How. St., § 4161d2), authorizing mining and manufacturing corporations that are about to expire by limitation of law to continue for a period not exceeding thirty years, held valid, having been adopted after the amendment to Const., art. 15, § 10, took effect.—Seneca Mining Co. v. Osmun, 82 Mich. 573.

¶ 56. An amendment of the constitution does not enlarge statutes previously passed. —Dewar v. People, 40 Mich. 401.

¶ 57. An amendment to the constitution does not validate an unconstitutional statute or ordinance.—Dullman v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392; Mount Pleasant v. Vansice, 43 Mich. 361.

¶ 58. Power subsequently conferred upon a legislature by an amendment of the constitution does not validate a statute which was void when enacted.—Seneca Mining Co. v. Osmun, 82 Mich. 573.

§ 18. Self-executing effect.

See also post ¶ 397.

[Note. The meaning and operation of the self-executing provisions with respect to particular matters are treated in connection with such matters, when practicable. For example, see Jury, I (right to jury trial); Elections, III (right to vote); Foreign Judgments (full faith and credit); Examination of Witnesses, IV (privilege against self-crimination); Indictment, IX, B (right to confront witnesses). A few exceptions to this policy have been made, e. g., the provision against imprisonment for debt is treat post VIII. Generally the validity of particular statutes assailed as offending the self-executing provisions is treated in this topic at the appropriate place. See post III, IV, VIII, IX, XII.]

¶ 59. County boards of supervisors possess, generally, only such powers as are expressly given them by the legislature, therefore Const., art. 4, § 49, providing for county and township roads and authorizing legislation, cannot be held self-executing in Wayne County as to the powers necessary to carry the act into effect and not self-executing in all other counties.—Board of Road Com'rs of Wayne County v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 148 Mich. 255.

Improper action under valid statute, see post § 22.

Effect of good intent, where statute is obnoxious to constitution, see post § 26.

Effect of repugnancy, doctrine that invalid statute is total nullity, see post § 27.

Effect of amendment to validate statutes, see ante § 17.

Evasive statutes, see also post § 113.

Between federal and state laws on same subject, see post § 123.

¶ 60. A statute cannot be declared void on the ground of its violating sound political principles, when it does not come in conflict with constitutional provisions.—People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

¶ 61. An act of the legislature is not to be declared void upon any general notion that it violates a great principle of right or of general jurisprudence.—Robinson v. The Red Jacket, 1 Mich. 171.

¶ 62. It is questionable whether the judiciary has power to pronounce an act void because it is repugnant to fundamental principles not expressly declared, but necessarily implied in a republican constitution.—People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244.

¶ 63. A statute will not be declared unconstitutional and void solely on the ground of unjust and oppressive provisions, or because it is supposed to violate the natural, social, or political rights of the citizen, unless it can be shown that such injustice is prohibited or such rights guaranteed or protected by the constitution.—Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co., 106 Mich. 582.

¶ 64. An act of congress that relates to a subject falling within the province of the national government cannot be declared invalid unless it conflicts with something found in the national constitution.—Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 214.

¶ 65. A legislative act not violative of any constitutional provision or principle must, when assailed, be its own sufficient and conclusive evidence of the justice, propriety and policy of its passage.—Flint & F. Plank Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99.

§ 20. ——Doubtful cases.

Construction in harmony with constitution, see post § 25.

Doubt as to compliance with 50-day clause, see post ¶ 97.

Avoidance of invalidating construction in doubtful cases, see also post § 25.

¶ 68. The legislature has power to adopt a statute except as it is prohibited by the constitution, and a statute will not be declared in conflict with the constitution while a serious doubt exists as to a conflict.—Attorney General v. State Board of Assessors, 143 Mich. 73.

¶ 69. A statute should not be declared unconstitutional unless the conflict between the constitution and the statute is palpable and is free from reasonable doubt.—Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; Scott v. Smart's Ex'rs, 1 Mich. 295; Southworth v. Palmyra & J. R. Co., 2 Mich. 287; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244; Sears v Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320; People ex rel. Twitchell v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Inkster v. Carver, 16 Mich. 484.

¶ 70. A statute is not unconstitutional unless in plain violation of some provision in the constitution; and its constitutionality will be supported by all possible presumptions not clearly inconsistent with the language and subject-matter.—Attorney-General v. Preston, 56 Mich. 177.

¶ 71. In a case of doubt every possible presumption, not clearly inconsistent with the language and the subject-matter, is to be made in favor of the constitutionality of legislation.—Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

¶ 72. The power of declaring laws unconstitutional should be exercised with extreme caution, and never where serious doubt exists as to the conflict. In cases of doubt, every possible presumption, not clearly inconsistent with the language and the subject-matter, is to be made in favor of the constitutionality of the act.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 234.

¶ 73. The court should not decide against the validity of a statute unless clearly convinced that it conflicts with the constitution.—Fifield v. Close, 15 Mich. 505.

¶ 74. A statute cannot be condemned as unconstitutional unless the conflict between it and the fundamental law is clear and substantial.—People v. Morris, 80 Mich. 634.

¶ 75. A statute must be presumed to be constitutional unless its repugnancy to the constitution clearly appears.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

¶ 76. Courts should be careful not to declare statutes unconstitutional upon agreed and general statements and without the fullest disclosure of all material facts.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400, affirming 83 Mich. 592.

¶ 77. Pub. Acts 1889, No. 225 (How. St., § 9354j), entitled an "act declaring certain contracts, agreements, undertakings and combinations unlawful, and to provide punishment for those who shall enter into the same or do any act in performance thereof," is not so clearly invalid that a court of the first instance should declare it void.—Merz Capsule Co. v. United States Capsule Co., 67 Fed. 414.

¶ 78. The taxing power of a state is necessary to its existence, and, being one of its attributes of sovereignty, a statute passed for the levy and collection of its revenue must not be held void by a federal court unless it is so clearly an illegal encroachment upon private rights as to leave no doubt of its invalidity.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223, affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 79. A statute is not to be pronounced void upon the ground that it conflicts with a state constitution, unless the repugnancy to the constitution be clear, and the conclusion that it exists, inevitable.—Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 666, 22 L. ed. 227.

§ 21. ——Impolitic or unwise legislation.

Presumption that legislative judgment was reasonable and sound, see post § 24.
Inquiry as to legislative intent or motive, see post § 26.

¶ 80. It is not for the courts to debate the policy and wisdom of legislative classification which is not on its face convincingly arbitrary, capricious and unreasonable.—Lundstrom v. Township of Ellsworth, 196 Mich. 502.

¶ 81. Considerations of mere expediency or policy cannot enter into the question of a statute's constitutionality.—Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320.

¶ 82. The courts have nothing to do with the economic wisdom of the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, regulating the issuance and sale of securities, all such considerations being for the legislature.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

¶ 83. The Supreme Court will not question the wisdom of the legislature in the exercise of its lawful discretion.—Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423.

¶ 84. Mere inconvenience, however great, is not sufficient to defeat a law. That is a consideration for the legislature and not for the court.—Van Husan v. Heames, 96 Mich 504.

¶ 85. That provisions in the general statute for the incorporation of ecclesiastical bodies (Pub. Acts 1897, No. 209) are ill suited to the church polity of a particular religious body does not justify the courts in declaring the act unconstitutional.—Graham v. Muskegon County Clerk, 116 Mich. 571.

§ 22. ——Administrative and judicial acts done under statute.

Presumption that officials will administer law in legal manner, see also post § 23.

¶ 86. A tax statute cannot be declared invalid on the ground that the officers acting under it fail to perform their duty.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223, affirmed in 201 U. S. 245 , 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

§ 23. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to constitutionality.

Presumptions respecting manner of enactment and germaneness of amendments, see Statutes, III, IV.

¶ 87. Where a legislative act may be construed in accordance with or in violation of a constitutional provision it will be construed so as to save the act; the legislature will be presumed to have intended the language of the act to be used in its constitutional sense.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

¶ 88. There is always a presumption in favor of constitutionality, and this presumption justifies a construction that is rather against the natural interpretation of the language used, if necessary to sustain the law.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 89. Every intendment is in favor of the due enactment of a statute, and to overcome this legal presumption it must conclusively appear from the legislative journals that constitutional requirements were lacking in its passage.—Hart v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446; Common Council of Detroit v. Board of Assessors of Detroit, 91 Mich. 78.

¶ 90. The charter of Detroit (Laws 1857, Act No. 55), in establishing the Recorder's Court with exclusive jurisdiction to try crimes committed within the city, and to try such crimes on indictments found in the circuit court for Wayne county, is entitled to such presumptions as long practical construction and acquiescence create; and its constitutionality is sustained.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 91. In an action to compel a railroad to establish a residence crossing for the benefit of an individual, since it is not for public use, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that such action would come under the police power of the state: so held where one sought to force construction of a private crossing under a statute enacted after the railroad was built.—People v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 471.

¶ 92. It must be presumed that the Michigan Securities Commission will not disregard its duty in the fair application of the provisions of the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 46 (Comp. Laws 1915, § 11945 et seq.) relating to the regulation of the sale and disposition of bonds, stocks or other securities within the state and the issuance of licenses therefor.—Merrick v. N. W. Halsey Co., 242 U. S. 568, 61 L. ed. 498, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227, reversing 228 Fed. 805.

¶ 93. How. St., § 799, which provides for an adjudication by fence viewers of the amount due from one owner of land to another for constructing or repairing a line fence between their grounds, is not invalid because it omits to provide expressly that notice shall be given to the interested parties of the viewers' meeting to assess the cost of the fence. The statute impliedly provides for notice; and courts will assume that the legislature did not intend to deprive parties of their day in court where they might appear to protect their rights.—Gilson v. Munson, 114 Mich. 671.

¶ 94. Laws 1850, No. 161, § 2 (Comp. L. 1897, § 5593), imposing liability for injuries caused by dogs, and providing that in an action of trespass on the case, the plaintiff and defendant may be examined under oath touching the matter at issue, and evidence may be given as in other cases, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, by the evidence, that the defendant is justly liable for the damages complained of under the provisions of this act, the court shall render judgment against such defendant for double the amount of damages proved, and costs of suit, has been operated under for nearly half a century, and the presumption is strong that the statute has been closely scrutinized by court and counsel and found valid. —Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675, writ of error dismissed in 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

¶ 95. It must be assumed, in view of the constitutional prohibition against combining the legislative and judicial functions in any one of the three state governmental branches, that, in the enactment of the Railroad Commission Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6524 et seq., relating to the fixing of rates of railroads by the railroad commission and for review of decisions of the commission by the courts, that there was no intent to confer on the courts any power of legislation.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 203 Fed. 864; affirmed in 239 U. S. 356, 60 L. ed. 327, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

¶ 96. The constitution of Michigan, art. 4, providing that the powers of government are divided into three departments, legislative, executive and judicial, and that no person belonging to one department shall exercise the powers properly belonging to another, except in cases expressly provided in the constitution, separates the legislative, executive and judicial powers, and, in the absence of a clear decision of the Michigan Supreme Court to the contrary, it will be assumed that legislative functions in regard to railroad rates were not granted to the courts by Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 26 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6549) providing that any common carrier or other party in interest dissatisfied with the orders of the Railroad Commission may bring a suit in the state circuit court to set aside the order on the ground that the rates fixed are unreasonable, and that the court shall have power "to affirm, vacate or set aside the order * * * in whole or in part, and to make such other order or decree as the court shall decide to be in accordance with the facts and the law," and further providing that if different or additional evidence is introduced, the court, before judgment, shall transmit a copy of it to the commission, and the latter may alter or rescind its order, and is required to report its action to the court, and the judgment is to be rendered as though the last action of the commission had been taken at first, the words "such other order or decree" not embracing a change in the rates fixed, but only such other orders as are incident to an equity case.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 235 U. S. 402, 59 L. ed. 288, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; affirming 203 Fed. 864.

¶ 97. If it were simply a matter of doubt whether an act was passed in disregard of the constitutional provision that the bill must be introduced within the first fifty days of the legislative session, the act should be sustained.—Pack v. Barton, 47 Mich. 520.

¶ 98. That the state legislature intended or attempted to invade the field covered by federal legislation in enacting Act No. 173, Public Acts 1911 (How. St., 2d Ed., §§ 6526, 6531), pertaining to car service and demurrage charges, cannot be presumed.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 183 Mich. 6.

¶ 99. It must be presumed, when an order of the Michigan Railroad Commission merely requires a competing steam railroad and an interurban railroad to interchange cars, carload shipments, less than carload shipments and passenger traffic, in a certain town, in accordance with Pub. Acts 1907, No. 312, § 7, that is, "in the same manner and under the same general conditions except as to motive power as belt line railroads and terminal railroads are now or may be used for like purposes," that the state will not so construe or enforce the order as to interfere with or obstruct interstate commerce.—Michigan Central R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 615, 59 L. ed. 750, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; affirming 168 Mich. 230.

§ 24. ——As to occasion or reasonableness of legislative action.

Presumption that executive duties will be justly performed, see also post ¶ 806.

¶ 100. The legislature having an unquestionable right to prescribe the general features of local government in subordination to the constitutional purpose, and the boundary between the domain of state and local powers being indistinct, the presumption that exists in all cases, that the legislature purposes to keep within the limits of its authority, will not only obtain where legislation is assailed as an infringement upon the right of municipal self-government, but more than the usual force will be allowed to the legislative judgment as to what is proper and admissible in the particular case.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 Mich. 108.

¶ 101. In passing an act for a provisional appointment of a local officer which the city would ordinarily control as one of its local affairs, it will be presumed that the legislature was warranted by an exigency in the absence of evidence to the contrary; but it cannot be presumed when the act shows there was none.—Moreland v. Millen, 126 Mich. 381.

¶ 102. In determining the validity of a police regulation the reasonableness of the fee imposed depends largely upon the sound discretion of the legislature, and it will be presumed that the amount of the fee is reasonable unless the contrary appears upon the face of the law itself or is established by proper evidence.—Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157.

¶ 103. In determining whether an enactment was passed by virtue of the police power or the taxing power, the disposition of the fee imposed is not conclusive.—Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157.

¶ 104. Legislative regulation of the use of private property will be presumed to be reasonable and necessary, unless the contrary appears from facts of which the court may take judicial notice.—People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527.

¶ 105. To warrant a decree declaring a rate statute invalid, the proof that such statute necessarily results in confiscation must be clear, satisfactory and convincing.—Ann Arbor R. Co. v. Fellows, 236 Fed. 387.

¶ 106. An order of the Michigan Railroad Commission suspending a supplemental tariff of a railroad company pending a determination as to whether such tariff is justified will not be judicially interfered with on the ground of interference with interstate commerce, where a conclusion as to whether the power of the Commission has been transcended must be reached from conflicting affidavits or on ex parte affidavits.—Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; affirming 198 Fed. 1009.

¶ 107. Courts will always construe a legislative act so as to give it effect as law if it be practicable to do so. An intent to violate the constitution is not to be presumed in any case; and a construction that would have that effect is not to be adopted unless forced upon the court by the terms employed.—Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 322.

¶ 108. Where two constructions of a statute are possible the one that is consistent with the constitution is to be preferred as that presumptively intended by the legislature.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 109. Statutes are to be so construed as to render them constitutional, if possible within reason.—Albert v. Gibson, 141 Mich. 698.

¶ 110. The power given by the municipal charter of Three Rivers to the village authorities to open and vacate alleys was not designed to exclude the exercise by the circuit courts of their statutory power to alter or vacate town plats, and hence is valid.—Case v. Frey, 24 Mich. 251.

¶ 111. The statute creating the police court of Bay City confines the jurisdiction of the court so created, within that city's corporate limits, and does not interfere with the power given justices in cases arising in other parts of the county outside of the city.—Perrott v. Pierce, 75 Mich. 578.

¶ 112. Laws 1893, Act No. 79, requiring foreign corporations to pay a franchise fee and avoiding all contracts made in this state after a certain date by any foreign corporation not complying with said section, must, to avoid conflict with U. S. Const., art. 1, § 8, the commerce clause, be held inapplicable to a foreign corporation the business of which in Michigan consists merely of selling, through itinerant agents and delivering, commodities manufactured outside of this state.—Colt v. Sutton, 102 Mich. 324.

¶ 113. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 309, construed as allowing a change of venue on making an affidavit in the form specified and not as requiring that the facts specified be established (such being the construction adopted with the statute) is not unconstitutional when so construed.—Preston Nat. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 272.

¶ 114. Comp. L. 1897, § 10761, governing attachment of forest products while in transit or while being driven or sorted for delivery is not unconstitutional because is does not provide for payment of expenses of holding the attached property until the sheriff demands delivery, since the law contemplates immediate possession in the attaching officer and section 10769 provides that storage on the products shall be taxed as costs.—Lake v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 132 Mich. 190.

¶ 115. Act No. 104, Pub. Acts 1909, prescribing the liability of common carrier railroad companies to their employees should not be declared void unless it is clear that the legislature has exceeded its constitutional powers and that the act cannot be given effect within the constitutional restrictions by reasonable constructions of its provisions.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 116. A legislative repeal of a charter, involving judicial functions, could not be sustained subject to a right in the corporators to have the question of violation tried in the courts afterwards. There can be no appeal to the courts from the conclusions of the legislature in matters within its jurisdiction; and the act, if valid for any purpose, must be conclusive. But the legislature cannot pass finally upon questions of private right.—Flint & F. Plank Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99.

¶ 117. The act for levying tolls on the commerce on the Muskegon river to pay for its improvement, after the auditor general had refused to honor a contract for payment out of the internal improvement fund because it was exhausted, could not be construed, and thereby supported on the ground of the state's having misappropriated the internal improvement fund, as in that case any valid claim would be against the whole state, and could not lawfully be imposed upon one section exclusively, or on the commerce of one section.—Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 269.

¶ 118. Though the legislature may provide for a single justice of the peace in cities, Local Acts 1905, No. 392, which attempted to substitute a municipal court with a judge and one associate in the city of Battle Creek for the justices, and empowered the associate to act only in certain contingencies beyond his will, cannot be regarded as an act to limit the number of justices of the peace, it not providing for the election of any eo nomine and containing provisions as to jurisdiction material to the act and inharmonious with any such purpose.—Attorney General ex rel. Hooper v. Loomis, 141 Mich. 547.

¶ 119. Local Acts 1905, No. 392, being an act to establish a "municipal court" in Battle Creek by its express terms, cannot, however, be regarded as such in actual purpose in view of the fact that the jurisdiction of the court is not limited to municipal boundaries, that it does not relieve existing courts but essays to supplant the justices of the peace, and that it serves no distinctive municipal as distinguished from a general purpose. Accordingly it cannot be sustained as an act to establish such a court.—Attorney General ex rel. Hooper v. Loomis, 141 Mich. 547.

¶ 120. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit the accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and to apportion the claims of the former territory of said county, being unconstitutional on the ground of vesting judicial power in the board and precluding claimants from a proper review, was not sustainable on the alleged ground that the board had the same power to audit such claims as is possessed and exercised by officers of municipalities other than counties, as such officers exercised no judicial power but merely acted as agents of the municipalities, and their rejection of claims did not operate as an adjudication preventing the claimants securing redress in the courts.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 121. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and to apportion the claims of the former territory of said county, being unconstitutional on the ground of vesting judicial power in the board and precluding claimants from a proper review, was not sustainable on the ground that boards of supervisors and in Wayne county, auditors were permitted to audit claims, as Const., art. 10, § 10, gives such bodies that authority.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 122. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit the accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and apportion the claims to the former territory of said county, being unconstitutional as vesting judicial power in the board, the vice was not removed by the provision that an aggrieved party might resort to mandamus proceedings.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 123. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit the accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and to apportion the claims of the former territory of said county, being unconstitutional on the ground of vesting judicial power in the board and precluding claimants from a proper review, was not sustainable by reason of decisions that circuit court commissioners in claims against estates of decedents might exercise judicial powers, as the legislation assailed in such cases was maintained because it was older than the constitution and its validity had been recognied since the adoption of the constitution, and in addition retrial was provided for as to the decisions of such commissioners.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

Destruction or prohibition under guise of the police power, see post § 98.

¶ 124. Where a legislature acts within the line of its constitutional powers, the motives of its action can never be judicially reviewed, nor can courts in any way determine the propriety of its enactments.—Fifield v. Close, 15 Mich. 505.

¶ 125. With the reason entertained by the legislature for the enactment of a law, courts have no concern, unless such reason appears upon the face of the law itself, or upon the legislative journals and not then, unless the purpose be one prohibited by the constitution.—Attorney General v. Parsell, 100 Mich. 170.

¶ 126. The fact that a legislative measure apparently meritorious, does not warrant a disregard of constitutional provisions designed as a public protection, the effect of which would be to take away such protection in cases where needed, through the practical nullification of the fundamental law.—People ex rel. Kent Co. Sup'rs v. Loomis, 135 Mich. 556.

¶ 127. When an act can only operate by violating a provision of the constitution, it cannot be upheld on the ground that the object contemplated by the legislature was different.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116.

¶ 128. In determining whether the construction of a street railway by a municipality on its streets is a forbidden work of internal improvement (Const., art. 14, § 9) the purpose or design of it as a legitimate improvement of highways or as an essentially different purpose may be looked to by the courts.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

Liability of justice for causing arrest under invalid law, see False Imprisonment; Justices of the Peace, II.
[Note. Whether or not a statute may be sustained in part, though another part is invalid, will usually depend on whether the parts are severable and can stand independently. This involves general construction of statutes, and therefore is treated in Statutes, V.]

¶ 129. An unconstitutional statute is no law; it cannot legally justify any action or nonaction; no rights can be founded upon it, nor can any person or persons be deprived of any rights or privileges because such a law has apparently been enacted and appears upon the statute book.—Adsit v. Osmun, 84 Mich. 420.

¶ 130. An unconstitutional statute is a statute only in form and lacks the force of law, and is of no more saving effect to justify action under it than if it had never been enacted.—Taggart, Attorney General ex rel. Mason v. Perkins, 73 Mich. 303; Michigan Sugar Co. v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 674, writ of error dismissed in 185 U. S. 112, 46 L. ed. 829, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

¶ 131. A statute unconstitutional in part may be valid in its remaining parts.—Brooks v. Hill, 1 Mich. 118; Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 6 Mich. 266; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 Mich. 108; Mathias v. Cramer, 73 Mich. 5; Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393; Chambe v. Wayne Probate Judge, 100 Mich. 112. [Note. Many other cases exemplifying this rule will be found in Statutes, V.]

¶ 132. It is competent for the legislature in the same act to repeal any former one within its purview, although every other provision in the repealing act is unconstitutional.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 14 Mich. 276.

¶ 133. The unconstitutionality of Acts No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, and No. 170, Pub. Acts 1903, amending the local option statute, does not render said statute as originally passed (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889) unconstitutional. —People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477; affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

§ 28. Occasion and right to invoke constitution.

Loss of right by waiver and estoppel, or by failure to present question below, see post §§ 29, 30.

Declination to decide unnecessary or untimely question, see post § 31.

¶ 134. Under Comp. L. 1897, chapter 272, which requires prior officers to turn over all books and papers to their successors and gives the right to institute proceedings to compel such delivery, the respondent may raise the question of the constitutionality of the amending act under which the relator claims office. —Fillmore v. Van Horn, 129 Mich. 52.

¶ 135. Act No. 170, Pub. Acts 1903, is limited to an amendment of a single section of Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, the Local Option Statute, and provides that the act shall not be construed to prohibit "the sale of wine or cider from home-grown fruit in quantities of not less than five gallons." Held, even if this amendment should be deemed unconstitutional as being class legislation, the petitioner in habeas corpus convicted for keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, would not be entitled to a release. —In re Wilson, 160 Mich. 42.

¶ 136. Laws 1885, Act No. 134, entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy," was amended by Laws 1887, Act No. 196 (How. St., § 2287, ch. 8), so that the original exemption contained therein of retail dealers of patent and proprietary medicines was limited to dealers of three years' standing or more. Held, that whether this amendment was or was not unconstitutional, as granting a monopoly and as introducing an object not embraced in the title of the original act, was immaterial in a prosecution, under the provisions of the act, of a person not charged with vending such medicines; since if the amendment were invalid, the original act would remain in force governing the prosecution.—People v. Moorman, 86 Mich. 433.

¶ 137. A tax purchaser holding under deeds from the state the interest which the state had in the lands, which deeds are expressly subject to the conditions imposed by Pub. Acts 1897, No. 220, relating to notice of the right to reconveyance, etc., cannot urge that the act is unconstitutional because its provisions are not within its title.—John Duncan Land & Min. Co. v. Rusch, 145 Mich. 1.

¶ 138. The question whether a proviso in Pub. Acts 1901, No. 226, that "the provisions of this section requiring a ritualistic form of work shall not apply to the New Era Association of Grand Rapids," is class legislation and void, cannot be raised in an action on a benefit certificate of such association; and such association has a valid status as a corporation, organized under the fraternal society law, until the state, upon its own initiative or on relation of an interested person, moves in the matter.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 145 Mich. 683.

¶ 139. Whether or not the provisions of the cumulative sentence clauses in the indeterminate sentence law are valid or not is of no concern to one sentenced under that act for a crime done in prison, for the law would not be unconstitutional in its entirety even though those provisions were invalid. —People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

¶ 140. A state statute providing for mechanics' liens on watercraft on account of work done or materials furnished will not be held to be unconstitutional on the ground that the seizure of the vessel, the subjection of her to sale and the proceeds thereof to distribution in the state court would be in conflict with the exclusive jurisdiction in admiralty of the courts of the United States in favor of maritime liens where the complaint on that ground is not made by a holder of a maritime lien.—Iroquois Transportation Co. v. Dalaney Forge & Iron Co., 205 U. S. 354, 51 L. ed. 836, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; affirming 142 Mich. 84.

¶ 141. An act annexing territory to a city cannot be objected to as invalid for subjecting the annexed territory to local assessments at the same time from two different municipalities for the same purposes, where it does not appear that at the time the act took effect any taxes or assessments were levied or collected for grading or paving of streets, building sidewalks, drains or sewers, etc.—Attorney General ex rel. Crane v. Amos, 60 Mich. 372.

¶ 142. Where it is not shown or claimed that any property owner within a highway improvement assessment district was assessed in excess of actual resultant benefits the question of violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity of taxation by Pub. Acts 1915, No. 59, relating to the construction and improvement of highways, in providing in counties under the county highway system that the cost of the improvement shall be apportioned between the special assessment district, the affected township, and the county, while in counties retaining the township system the total amount is to be assessed against the special assessment district and the township or townships through which the road passes, thus placing a greater burden on the townships in the latter case than in the former, and relieving the county from assessment, is immaterial.—Loomis v. Rogers, 197 Mich. 265.

¶ 143. The fact that the proceeds of a tax levied upon the property of telephone companies under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 49, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1955 et seq., providing for the assessment of their property on the ad valorem basis, but exempting from taxation companies having gross receipts less than $500, go specifically to the primary school fund and do not operate, directly or indirectly, to reduce the tax burden of the telephone companies, and that complaint is not made by some company improperly placed in the taxed class, does not support the contention that complainants suffered no harm from alleged discriminations, and so have no cause to complain.—The Michigan Telephone Cases, 185 Fed. 634; affirmed 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; 229 U. S. 335, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

¶ 144. The question of the constitutionality of Local Acts of 1889, No. 455, tit. 5. § 24. authorizing the city of Saginaw to issue its bonds for the purpose of raising money with which to purchase a site and erect thereon a city hall in said city, and making it the duty of the common council to proceed immediately to procure such site, and construct said city hall within designated boundaries as to location, will not be determined in a suit by a taxpayer to restrain the common council from issuing such bonds, where the action of the council appears to be voluntary and under no compulsion from the legislature.—Carlisle v. City of Saginaw, 84 Mich. 134.

§ 29. ——Waiver, estoppel and laches.

¶ 145. The public authorities may be precluded by acquiescence from disputing the validity of legislation under which townships are organized and have been for years performing their usual functions.—People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463.

¶ 146. Where a foreign corporation not only sells its products through itinerant agents, but comes within the state, asking to have its articles of association filed here, and that it be put on the same footing with home corporations, if it pays under protest the franchise fee required by Laws 1883, Act No. 79, it cannot recover back such fee on the ground that the statute is in conflict with the power of congress to regulate commerce between the states.—Moline Plow Co. v. Wilkinson, 105 Mich. 57.

¶ 147. A municipality will not be estopped to deny the validity of an act on the ground that as defendant in a prior suit involving the same act which was settled without deciding as to its constitutionality, it had contended against its constitutionality.—Cote v. Village of Highland Park, 173 Mich. 201.

¶ 148. A litigant is estopped from attacking the validity of a statute under which he is seeking relief.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Rich, 91 Mich. 293.

¶ 149. The objection to the log-lien law (Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 145), that it provides for seizure without service of process of any kind, cannot be raised by parties shown to have been in contract relation with defendants, and to have been personally served with the process by which the suit was begun.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 150. The objection, that under a statute for condemning land for streets there was no provision for such a jury as the constitution (article 18, § 2) requires, is not waived by taking a nugatory appeal from the proceedings before a justice to the circuit court, where the appeal is provided by the invalid statute and falls with it as an integral part of it.—City of Mt. Clemens v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 293.

¶ 151. A voluntary payment of personal taxes for one year assessed against a corporation under an invalid statute, has no bearing upon the right of such corporation to raise the question of the validity of such statute, in a suit to recover taxes subsequently assessed thereunder.—City of Detroit v. Mackinaw Transportation Co., 140 Mich. 174.

¶ 152. A provision in a tax law (Pub. Acts 1893. No. 206), making the tax deed conclusive of title in the tax purchaser, if void, does not present a constitutional question which can be urged to other portions of the statute involved in a petition for writ of assistance to the purchaser based on sale under a decree, and where the only irregularities urged are such as occurred prior to the decree and were concluded thereby.—Ball v. Ridge Copper Co., 118 Mich. 7.

¶ 153. Where, under the federal constitution, and after forty years of practical construction, a state has the right to choose presidential electors by districts, such right is not lost by nonuser although a different method has generally been followed for sixty years.—McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377; affirmed 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3.

§ 30. ——Questions not presented on trial.

The general doctrine that questions for error or appeal must be seasonably raised below and saved by exception is treated in Saving Questions for Review.

The court of review will not go into questions not presented and not properly saved for review. See Appeal, XII, A. B.

On error or appeal unnecessary questions, especially constitutional ones, will ordinarily not be decided. See Appeal, XII, A.

¶ 154. A legislative act will not be declared unconstitutional unless the point is presented in such form as to render its decision imperative.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181; Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165; Upton v. Kennedy, 36 Mich. 215.

¶ 155. The constitutionality of a statute will not ordinarily be considered by the Supreme Court where no jurisdiction was obtained in the proceedings taken under it.—Fox v. Holcomb, 34 Mich. 298.

¶ 156. Courts have not an immediate and general supervision of the constitutionality of statutes, and it is only in a litigated case where the question arises that it is the duty of a court to determine whether an act of the legislature is constitutional or not.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176. 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400; affirming 83 Mich. 592.

¶ 157. A street railroad company cannot complain on writ of error that Pub. Acts 1893, No. 171, § 5 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6868), providing that the commissioner of railroads shall, as soon as possible after the passage of the act, examine the crossings of the tracks of railroads and street railroads then existing, and order such changes made in the manner of such crossings, or such safeguards for protection against accidents to be provided thereat, as in his judgment ought to be so made or provided, and shall apportion any expense incidental thereto between the companies affected, as he may deem just and reasonable, is unconstitutional because not providing for notice where, in its application for writ of mandamus to vacate the order of the commissioner of railroads requiring it to pay a portion of the expense of constructing and operating safety appliances at a grade crossing of a steam railroad it claimed that such order was invalid because it deprived such street railroad of its property without due process of law and of the equal protection of the laws, and the issue framed in the cause went to a final hearing.—Detroit, Ft. W. & B. R. Co. v. Osborn, 189 U. S. 383, 47 L. ed. 860, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; affirming 127 Mich. 219.

§ 31. ——Declination of unnecessary or untimely questions.

Where person raising question is not entitled or affected, see ante § 28.

Right of Supreme Court to decide or refuse to decide when unnecessary, see Appeal, § 264.

Declination on certiorari of constitutional questions not material to decision, see Certiorari, ¶¶ 171, 172.

¶ 158. The constitutionality of statutes will not be passed upon where the case can be determined without doing so.—Powell v. Eldred, 39 Mich. 552; Morrison v. Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297; Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 159. The validity of particular provisions in a statute cannot properly be decided unless expressly involved in a case, and are not passed on where the only questions concern other provisions in the law.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 160. Constitutional questions will not be passed upon when other questions are raised by the record which dispose of the case.—People v. Quider, 172 Mich. 280.

¶ 161. It is the settled policy of the court to refuse to pass upon the constitutionality of a statute when a case may be disposed of on other grounds.—People v. Hall, 185 Mich. 54. (Per Brooke, C. J., and McAlvay, J.)

¶ 162. The constitutionality of an act will not be considered where a decision of the case can be reached on other grounds.—Negaunee Nat. Bank v. Le Beau, 195 Mich. 502.

¶ 163. Upon an appeal by defendant from a conviction of having in his possession and under his control wild ducks with intent to ship them out of the state, the question whether or not the seizure of the ducks was by due process of law need not be decided.—People v. Van Pelt, 130 Mich. 621.

¶ 164. The question whether Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, § 7 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530), relating to the establishment of switching connections between railroads, is void upon its face because the severity of the penalties preclude an appeal to the courts against such provisions except at such risks and costs that they should not be compelled to incur will not be considered until the attempted enforcement thereof, since such provision for penalties is in a section by itself.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; affirming 198 Fed. 1009.

II. CONSTITUENT ORGANS AND DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT.

A. IN GENERAL; INTERFERENCE AND CONFLICT.

§ 32. Distribution of powers in general.

Powers in respect of particular subjects and matters, see post II, B.

Between states and nation, see post IV.

Judicial power defined, see post § 34.

Powers of local government divisions, see post, II, C.

Nondelegability of powers, see post II, D.

Interference by one department with another, see post §§ 36-44.

Distribution of powers under former constitution as aid in construction, see ante ¶ 30.

Judicial intervention nonessential to due process, see post § 127.

Jurisdiction of courts in general, see Courts, V.

Legislative and judicial functions of adoption and comity respecting foreign laws, see Conflicting of Laws, § 2, ¶ 3.

Ordaining power and scope of cities and villages, and validity of ordinances, see Municipal Corporations, VI, IX.

Constitutional division of powers, see Const. art. IV, §§ 1, 2.

Powers inherent in or guaranteed to the people, see Const., art. II, § 1 et seq.

General provisions as to organization, procedure and powers of legislative department, see Const., art. V.

General provisions as to executive department, see Const., art. VI.

General provisions as to judiciary, see Const., art. VII.

¶ 165. The apportionment of powers to one of the three co-ordinate departments of every free government—executive, legislative and judicial—is understood to be a prohibition of its exercise by either of the others. By a system of checks and balances of government, each is a restraint upon the rest, and if these checks and balances are disregarded, and power is usurped or abused, the remedy is by impeachment, and not by the assertion by one department of superior authority over another, its equal under the constitution.—People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320.

¶ 166. The three branches of government are to be kept as distinct as possible; and legislation is invalid that attempts to confer on one powers that under the constitution belong to another.—Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364.

§ 33. ——Changes by the constitution.

See also post ¶¶ 214, 866.

Amendment empowering legislature to abolish highway commissioner's office, see post ¶ 1132.

¶ 167. The constitutional amendment, Pub. Acts 1903, page 452, expressly authorizing the passage of an indeterminate sentence law negatives any argument of unconstitutionality of such a law on the ground that the legislature assumes to exercise the judicial function of imposing a sentence.—In re Campbell, 138 Mich. 597.

§ 34. "Courts" and "judicial power."

"Court" as including jury as part thereof, see also post ¶ 280.

"Judicial officers" within provision requiring election, see post § 265.

Requiring audit or approval of claim by judge, see post § 40.

Nature of powers given to commissioners, see post § 58.

Nature of the power of conservators of the peace, see post § 64.

Power of legislature to change, create or confer power, see post §§ 51-65.

General law as to nature, incidents, jurisdiction and power of courts, see Courts, V; Municipal Courts; Probate Courts.

Powers of clerks, commissioners and other ministerial officers of courts, see generally Courts, V.

Nature of office of referee of court, see Officers, I; Reference, I.

¶ 168. The word "courts," as used in Const., art. 6, § 1, means permanent organizations for the administration of justice, and not a special tribunal for a particular exigency.—Streeter v. Paton, 7 Mich. 341; Shurbun v. Hooper, 40 Mich. 503.

¶ 169. Commissioners on the estate of a deceased person act judicially in passing on claims, but are not a "court" in the constitutional sense, and Comp. L. 1871, chap. 158, How. St., ch. 224, in authorizing their appointment, is not unconstitutional.—Shurbun v. Hooper, 40 Mich. 503.

¶ 170. The State Board of Mediation and Arbitration is a "court" and within the power of the legislature to establish a court of conciliation (Const., art. 6, § 23), though such court has not the power to make enforceable judgments and decrees and the decisions of the court must be left to the assent of the parties.—Renaud v. State Board of Mediation, 124 Mich. 648.

¶ 171. The Industrial Accident Board is not a court within the meaning of the law. —Mackin v. Detroit-Timkin Axle Co., 187 Mich. 8.

¶ 172. The judicial power involves the power to hear and determine the matters to be disposed of, and this can only be done by some order or judgment which needs no additional sanction to entitle it to be enforced. No action that is merely preparatory to an order or judgment to be rendered by some different body can be properly called judicial. —Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 Mich. 361.

¶ 173. The distinction pointed out between judicial action and legislative and administrative action.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 173a. The power to take bail in criminal cases is not a judicial power within the meaning of Const., art. 6, § 1, conferring the judicial power of the state upon certain specified courts. But if it were, art. 6, § 16, would authorize the legislature to confer such power on circuit court commissioners.—Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

¶ 174. Judicial power is limited to litigation between parties in conflicting interest. —Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 236.

¶ 175. The removal of a person from his office for cause involves the exercise of judicial power.—People ex rel. Clay v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411.

¶ 176. Taking a complaint and issuing a warrant of arrest for a criminal offense—e. g., keeping open a saloon on Sunday, involves judicial action, power to perform which cannot be conferred upon a clerk, and therefore Pub. L. 1885, Act No. 127, so far as it seeks to confer such power upon the clerk of the police court of Grand Rapids, is invalid (Const., Art. VI, § 1.—People v. Colleton, 59 Mich. 573.

§ 35. Official discretion as judicial power.

See also ante ¶ 173.

¶ 177. The exercise of discretion in administrative affairs does not necessarily make such action judicial.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 178. Laws 1887, Act No. 285, regulating the transaction of business by foreign insurance companies, does not attempt to confer judicial powers upon the commissioner of insurance, the revocation of the certificate therein provided being a mere ministerial duty.—Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.

¶ 179. Laws of 1887, Act No. 293 (How. St., §§ 234b-234l), providing for election contests, makes it the duty of the board of examiners merely to recount the votes as they find them in the ballot boxes, and not to pass upon any question of fraud or irregularity, so that the duties of the board are ministerial, and the act is not unconstitutional as conferring judicial powers upon such board.—Andrews v. Otsego Probate Judge, 74 Mich. 278.

¶ 180. Under Public Acts 1899, No. 262, § 98, by which the auditor general is authorized to issue a certificate of error in tax sales, the fact that the auditor general is required to exercise duties requiring judgment and determination in controverted cases, does not make his act judicial and in violation of section 1, article 6 of the Constitution.—Northrup v. Maneka, 126 Mich. 550.

¶ 181. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, sec 3 subd. 6, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 191, providing that the board of registration may at its discretion revoke the certificate of registration in medicine of any registered practitioner who inserts any advertisement in any newspaper relative to venereal diseases is not unconstitutional as conferring upon the board judicial power in such revocation.—Kennedy v. State Board of Registration in Medicine, 145 Mich. 241.

Nature of judicial power, see ante § 34.
Discretion as involving judicial exercise, see ante § 35.
Judicial interference with executive, see post § 41.
Designating judges from other circuit to assist, see post § 60.
Relative functions in revising sentence and granting pardons or paroles, see post § 66.

¶ 182. Courts cannot lawfully be subjected to executive or ministerial interference in the exercise of their functions, and should not submit to it or receive directions for any purpose except from such other courts as by the constitution have superintending control over inferior courts.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

§ 37. Executive encroachment on legislative.

Approval or veto of bills by governor, see Statutes, I.

¶ 183. Under Const., art. 4, § 1, the legislative power is vested in the senate and house of representatives and the governor has no power to make laws, wherefore he cannot insert an enacting clause in a bill coming to him for signature.—People v. Dettenthaler, 118 Mich. 595.

§ 38. Legislative encroachment on judiciary or executive.

Nature of judicial power, see ante § 34.

Judicial encroachment on legislative, see post §§ 42-44.

Relative powers as to offices and appointments, see post § 46.

Legislative provision for vacancy appointments, see post § 46.

In tax matters, see post § 47.

Interference with records, see post § 48.

Creating new courts, changing old ones, altering places, and changing or conferring jurisdiction or procedure, see post §§ 51-65.

Interference with power over contempts, see post § 63.

In respect to pardons and paroles, see post § 66.

Legislative audits, invalidity, see post § 280

Presumption against intent to encroach or displace power, see ante § 23.

Relative functions of legislature and judiciary in revoking or repealing corporate charters and franchises, see Corporations, IV, XXIII.

¶ 184. The line between judicial and legislative authority is distinct. The legislature is not authorized to exercise any portion of the judicial power. It cannot set aside a judgment or decree, nor can it even require the judiciary to give a new hearing in a case once passed upon.—People ex rel. Butler v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 22.

¶ 185. The legislature cannot, except in a few cases where it is needful to enable it to perform properly its legislative functions, exercise authority judicial in its nature.—Flint & F. Plank Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99.

¶ 186. Where the legislature passed an act not purporting to be based upon a judicial finding that a private corporation had violated its charter, but simply providing that its charter "be and the same is hereby repealed," it was held that even if such act could be regarded as a legislative determination that a violation of charter had taken place, it would nevertheless be void as an attempted exercise of judicial power by the legislature.—Flint & F. Plank Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99.

¶ 187. The question whether a law has formerly existed is not one for legislative, but for judicial, cognizance.—Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358.

¶ 187a. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit the accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and apportion the claims to the former territory of said county, is unconstitutional as vesting judicial power in the board, contrary to Const., art. 6, § 1, vesting such power in the courts.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

§ 39. Imposing nonjudicial functions on courts.

Taking from jurisdiction to give to nonjudicial officers, see post § 59.

¶ 188. A circuit judge cannot be compelled to perform functions not judicial.—Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1; Houseman v. Kent County Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364.

¶ 188a. A circuit judge cannot be compelled to perform functions not judicial, and How. St., § 1730, is void for seeking to impose upon a court such administrative duties as the appointment of surveyors to examine the premises assessed, for the purpose of enabling the court to relevy a tax.—Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364.

¶ 189. The statute providing for the antemortem probate of wills is inoperative because arranging for a proceeding extra-judicial in its nature and inconclusive.—Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 236.

¶ 190. The inheritance tax, provided in Pub. Acts 1899, No. 188, is not unconstitutional as imposing duties not judicial upon the judge of probate, since the collection of the tax is an incident to the settlement of the estate under his administration.—Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 187.

¶ 191. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 272, providing for the designation of places for holding terms of the circuit court for the 37th judicial district (Calhoun county) by providing for the inspection of the court building and jail at Battle Creek by the circuit judge does not thereby confer legislative power on the judge, but the authority given is more ministerial than judicial, and is such power as may be granted to and exercised by him.—McCall v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 319.

§ 40. ——Judicial audit of claims.

Conferring on board auditing power reposed in courts, see ante ¶ 187a.

¶ 192. While duties of one department cannot be cast on another, a statute imposing upon the circuit judge the duty of auditing a coroner's account against the state is valid, and mandamus lies to compel such action.—Locke v. Speed, 62 Mich. 408.

¶ 193. The determination of the circuit court in allowing a claim by a coroner for an inquest upon a stranger, the cost of which is, by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 11828, paid by the state when allowed by the circuit court, involves the exercise of judicial discretion and judgment and is in that sense a judicial act.—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

§ 41. Judicial interference with executive or administrative powers.

Nature of judicial power, see ante § 34.

Executive interference with judiciary, see ante § 36.

Irreviewableness of executive action as a denial of justice, see post § 189.

Judicial power to review action of board of medical registration, see also Medicine and Surgery.

[Note. The disability of the judiciary to interfere is usually exemplified in decisions denying relief on the ground that to do so would, in the particular instance be an encroachment or assumption. Furthermore, the relief often has to be limited or adjusted so as to avoid such a result. For cases of this kind see the specific topics treating of the matter affected, such as Taxes, VI, A, or of the remedy sought, such as Certiorari, §§ 17-21; Injunctions, II, D; Mandamus, III.]

¶ 194. Administrative questions are not in their nature judicial and are not subject to review.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628.

¶ 195. The judicial power cannot interfere with the legitimate discretion of any other part of government.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 384.

¶ 196. As to all authority specially confided to the governor, whether by constitution or statute, it will be presumed that conclusive reasons required it to be confided to him, as an authority properly and peculiarly, if not exclusively, pertaining to the executive department, and therefore not subject to coercion by judicial process.—People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320.

¶ 197. The action of the executive in a matter reposed in his discretion is conclusive on the courts.—People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320.

¶ 198. The long established practice of an executive department should not be disturbed unless in violation of a statute, or so unjust and inequitable as to deprive persons or municipalities of a substantial right.—Stevens v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 62 Mich. 579.

§ 42. Judicial interference or control in legislative matters.

In tax matters, see post § 47.

Legislative encroachment on judiciary, see ante § 38.

Inability of courts to compel by mandamus the keeping of legislative journals according to constitution, see Mandamus, I.

¶ 199. The state legislature has power to refuse to perform even a contract, and when it forbids the application of money in the state treasury to any particular use, no court can interfere.—Saniiac County Sup'rs v. Auditor General, 68 Mich. 659.

¶ 200. Where legislative bodies are made the judges of the election and qualification of their own members, and are vested with power to determine contested elections, their action is final and cannot be reviewed by the courts.—Auditor General v. Menominee County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 552.

¶ 201. Under the division of powers in the constitution it is the duty of the courts not to enact but to expound the law, not to legislate but to construe legislation and to apply the law as found and written by a co-ordinate branch of the state government.—Cooke v. Holland Furnace Co., 200 Mich. 192.

¶ 202. A portion of a decree by which a court assumes the right to establish reasonable rules and regulations for the erection and maintenance of telegraph and telephone lines and poles upon city streets is void, as such action is legislative or administrative, and not judicial, and while the court may require a city to adopt reasonable rules and regulations, and may pass upon the validity of such action when taken, this is the extent of its authority.—Michigan Tel. Co. v. City of St. Joseph, 121 Mich. 502.

§ 43. ——Power to declare statutes invalid.

Policy and inclinations of courts in construing statutes questioned for validity, see ante §§ 6-31.

Restriction of power to expounding and construing law, see ante ¶ 201.

Persons entitled to raise question, and interest entitling persons, see ante §§ 28-30.

Proper presentation of question, see ante § 30.

Declination of questions not necessary to decision or not timely, see ante § 31.

¶ 203. The general jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to determine the constitutionality of legislative enactments is not limited to such statutes as deny or exclude political rights.—Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1.

¶ 204. The discretion of the legislature in apportioning senatorial districts is not absolute, and the constitutionality of a statute making such apportionment is reviewable.—Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1.

¶ 205. The Supreme Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to determine the constitutionality of an act of the legislature rearranging senatorial districts.—Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1.

¶ 206. The duty of the formation of senate districts and of determining the number of districts into which a county may be divided, is reposed by the constitution in the legislature, and this court assumes to determine only, whether in any particular case, the legislature has exercised a constitutional discretion.—Williams v. Secretary of State, 145 Mich. 447.

¶ 207. Justices of the peace should not assume to hold statutes to be unconstitutional. —Ortman v. Greenman, 4 Mich. 291.

[Note. In view of the later decision in Robinson v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549, wherein the action of a police justice in refusing to act under an unconstitutional statute was sustained, the foregoing dictum is weakened; although it did not assume to do more than reprehend the assumption of power by a justice of the peace to declare a law invalid where that was urged as a defense to an action. Editor.]

§ 44. ——Rate fixing.

See also ante ¶ 202.
Particular instances, see post § 50.

¶ 208. The legislature has power to fix the maximum rates to be charged for passenger service, and the extent of judicial interference is protection against unreasonable rates.—Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400, affirming 83 Mich. 592.

¶ 209. Courts cannot either make railroad rates, or review and revise those made by competent authority, and unless the law-making body so far transgresses fundamental law as to commit a legislative theft, the courts may not interfere.—Ann Arbor R. Co. v. Fellows, 236 Fed. 387.

¶ 210. The action of the Board of Control of the St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal in fixing tolls for use of river improvements is not reviewable in the courts.—Benjamin v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 42 Mich. 628; Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Lamport, 49 Mich. 442.

B. RELATIVE POWERS AND FUNCTIONS ON PARTICULAR SUBJECTS.

§ 45. Departmental and divisional changes.

Extension of legislative powers by constitutional amendments, see ante § 33.
Local self government and encroachments thereon, see post, II, C.
Delegations of power in formation of new divisions, see post § 88.
Places or terms for courts, see post § 53.
In respect to offices and elections, see post § 46.
Apportionment laws, see post §§ 258-260.
Annexations designed to alter apportionment districts, see post ¶ 526.
Formation of new counties or division of old, see post § 69.
Changing school districts, see post § 72.
As affecting right to vote, see post § 255.
Division of counties in forming apportionment districts, see post § 259.
Change of local divisions as change of apportionment, see post § 260.
Local powers of cities and villages, see Const. Art. VIII, §§ 20-25.

§ 46. Elections, appointment and removal of officers.

Legislative power to judge of election and qualifications of own members, see also ante § 42.
General power over election of officers, see post, XII.
Constitutional modes of selection, see post §§ 74, 75, 265-267.
Power to determine mode of selection, see post §§ 265-267.
Provision for election of "judicial officers," see post § 265.
Authorizing commissioner to act as probate judge in case of vacancy, see also post ¶ 283d.
Judicial powers involved, see ante § 34.
Election contests, see also ante § 35, ¶ 179.
Powers affected by policy of local self government, see post II, C.
Designation of local officers as infringement on local government, see post § 74.
Local rights as to duties and compensation, see post § 76.
Power over townships, see post § 73.

¶ 211. Short of destruction of the elective franchise the propriety of regulations of the franchise is for the legislature to the exclusion of the courts.—Common Council of Detroit v. Rush, 82 Mich. 532.

¶ 212. Const., art. 8, § 3, vesting in the governor the power to fill a vacancy in any state office with only the limitation that it shall be with the advice and consent of the senate, if in session, and hence giving the power to the governor to fill the vacancy for the entire unexpired term, does not prevent the legislature from providing in creating the board of state tax commissioners (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 154, § 145), that an appointee to fill the vacancy shall hold office only until the next meeting of the legislature; the office in question is not a constitutional office.—Attorney General ex rel. Dust v. Oakman, 126 Mich. 717.

¶ 212a. Under § 20, Art. VII, of the Constitution, the power to fill a vacancy in the office of judge of the superior court of the city of Grand Rapids, rests in the governor.—Attorney General ex rel. Danhof v. Renihan, 184 Mich. 272.

¶ 213. The power of appointment to office is not essentially an executive function and there is nothing in the constitution to prevent the legislature from providing for the appointment of a city park commissioner by the common council instead of by the mayor.—Attorney General ex rel. Maybury v. Bolger, 128 Mich. 355.

¶ 214. Comp. L. 1871, § 618 (How. St., § 651), permitting the governor to remove any state of county officer except the state treasurer and judges, is void, because at the time it was adopted the governor had no judicial power under the constitution.—Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392.

¶ 215. The governor cannot, by any act of his own, enlarge the power of removal of county officers granted him by the legislature.—People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187.

¶ 216. Under Const., art. 12, § 7, the legislature may vest in another department than the judicial the question whether cause exists for the removal of a county officer, and How. St., § 653, which vests such determination in the governor, is constitutional.—People ex rel. Clay v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411.

¶ 217. Laws 1893, Act No. 118, which provides for the appointment by the board of control of the House of Correction and Reformatory at Ionia of a warden, who shall be removable by the board for cause, after opportunity has been given him to be heard upon written charges, is not in conflict with Const., art. 12, § 8, which vests in the governor power to remove from office certain state officers, nor with Const., art. 8, § 2, which prohibits the exercise by any person belonging to one department of the government of the powers properly belonging to another, except in the cases expressly provided in the constitution.—Fuller v. Attorney General, 98 Mich. 96.

¶ 218. How. St., § 653, which authorizes the governor, in certain cases, to remove officers chosen by the electors of cities and villages, is valid, under Const., art. 15, § 13, conferring upon the legislature exclusive authority over the incorporation and organization of cities and villages, and article 12, section 7, requiring the legislature to provide by law for the removal of any officer elected by a county, township or school district.—Attorney General v. Common Council of Detroit, 112 Mich. 145.

¶ 219. Const., art. 12, § 8, empowering the governor during time the legislature is not in session to remove from office certain state officers for "gross neglect of duty, or for corrupt conduct in office," or for any other misfeasance or malfeasance therein, is not to be denied its application and force where the assigned ground is "gross neglect" because article 12, section 1, conferring sole power of impeachment on the legislature describes it as power of impeaching civil officers "for corrupt conduct in office," and there is no inconsistency or repugnancy between those provisions or any exclusiveness of the remedy by impeachment, even if they be so construed that the governor may have more grounds on which to act than are open for impeachment.—Attorney General ex rel. John T. Rich, Governor v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358.

§ 47. Tax and assessment matters.

Limitations on taxing power, see post §§ 152, 177, 227, 274; and see generally Taxes, I.
Discretion of officers as judicial assumption, see ante § 35.
Imposing on court powers relating to assessments, see also ante ¶ 188a.
Imposing duties in collection on probate court, see also ante § 39, ¶ 190.
Giving court commissioners power to pass on tax titles, see also post ¶ 283a.

¶ 220. The question of what notice shall be given of special assessments and how it shall be given, belongs to the legislative department of government and provisions therefor made by it will be upheld by the courts unless they clearly appear to result in denial of justice.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 221. Where the auditor general has made changes in the debits and credits on his books as between certain counties, a legislative joint resolution ordering them restored to their former condition, but leading the respective rights of the counties open to subsequent settlement, is not objectionable as an assumption of judicial authority.—Clare Supervisors v. Auditor General, 41 Mich. 182.

¶ 222. The establishment of a special assessment district, in the one instance by the legislature, and in the other instance by the common council, is the exercise of a legislative power with which the courts will not ordinarily interfere.—Voight v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 547; affirmed in 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337.

¶ 223. General Tax Law, § 127 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 107) making it the duty of the auditor general and commissioner of the state land office to determine when state tax lands shall become state homestead lands is not unconstitutional upon the ground that the making of said determination is a judicial act which under the constitution must be performed by a court, since it is in no sense a judicial act, because it determines no private right.—Griffin v. Kennedy, 148 Mich. 583.

§ 48. Power of eminent domain.

The power and its limitations, see Eminent Domain.

¶ 224. The appropriation of private property does not come under the "judicial power," as it is located under the constitution in courts, and except for the constitution the nature of the tribunal of condemnation would have been discretionary with the legislature. —Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Chesebro, 74 Mich. 466.

§ 49. Custody and control of public funds, records or property.

Power of legislature as to printing reports of Supreme Court, see post § 279.

Interference with local self government, see post §§ 70, 71.

Existing or vested right of officer to custody of funds, see also post ¶ 509.

Power of court over its own records, see Courts, V; Judgments, III, V; Records.

¶ 225. It is within the power of the legislature to insure the safety of county funds by providing for their deposit notwithstanding the fact that the county treasurer is a constitutional officer, intrusted with the custody of such funds.—Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co. v. Munson, 157 Mich. 505.

¶ 226. The register of deeds is a constitutional officer, but the conditions under which deeds are entitled to record are entirely within the discretion of the legislature, and the court cannot declare them void because they are harsh.—Van Husan v. Heames, 96 Mich. 504.

¶ 227. The fact that, by the terms of the Tax Law of 1893 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 67), the tax record, to which the decree refers for a description of the lands affected, and for the amounts decreed against them, is to be delivered to the county treasurer, in whose office it is to remain "except as needed in the office of the county clerk," does not render the act unconstitutional, as relieving the court from the necessity of entering a complete decree, to be retained in its own custody, since the court may at any time repossess itself of the tax record.—Merserean v. Miller, 112 Mich. 103.

¶ 228. The intention of the legislature in passing Pub. Acts 1905, No. 79, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 2622, providing that the county surveyor shall keep his field notes and other records in a fireproof vault in an office at the county seat to be designated by the board of supervisors, was to seek a place of safety therefor when they were not in use by him, and the legislature had the right to enact such a statute.—Grand Traverse County Sup'rs v. Allyn, 144 Mich. 300.

§ 50. Regulation of public services and rates.

Judicial encroachment on legislative functions, see also ante § 44.

Regulation as a general function of the state through the legislature, see post § 96.

Administration of the regulative power, see Public Service.

¶ 229. It is for the legislature and not for the courts to determine what are reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight on the different railroads of the state, under the power conferred by Const., art. 19a, § 1.—Wellman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 83 Mich. 592; affirmed 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400.

¶ 230. Pub. Acts 1907, No. 312, § 26, gives the courts authority to decide whether rates prescribed by the railroad commission are reasonable, and if they find them unreasonable to declare them invalid, and turn over the matter to the commission to make new rates. Held, the act is not unconstitutional as giving the courts power to fix rates.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 459.

¶ 231. The action of the Michigan Railway Commission in fixing a rate is not a legislative act upon its part, but is only administrative or ministerial in its function in putting into effect the legislative will which has been previously declared by the legislature.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355.

¶ 233. Whether a railroad rate or return is reasonable is a problem with a double aspect, legislative and judicial.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 203 Fed. 864; affirmed in 239 U. S. 356, 60 L. ed. 327, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

¶ 234. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 26, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6549, providing that any common carrier, being dissatisfied with any order of the railroad commission fixing rates may, within 30 days after issuance of the order, commence an action in the circuit court to vacate such order on the ground that the rates fixed are unlawful or unreasonable; that the circuit court may affirm, vacate or set aside the order of the railroad commission in whole or in part, and make such order or decree as the court shall decide to be in accordance with the law and facts; that if, upon the trial of the action new and additional evidence is heard which was not produced before the commissioner, the court, before proceeding to render judgment, unless it is stipulated to the contrary, shall transmit a copy of the evidence to the commission and stay the proceedings; that the commission shall consider such evidence and alter, modify, amend or rescind its order, and report its action to the court; that if the commission rescinds the order the action shall be dismissed, but if it shall alter, modify or amend the same, such altered, modified or amended order shall take the place of the original order, and judgment shall be rendered thereon, and if the original order shall not be rescinded or changed by the commission, judgment shall be rendered on it; that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court, and that in all actions the burden of proof shall be upon complainant to show that the order of the commission was unlawful or unreasonable, as the case may be, does not confer on the reviewing courts any legislative or administrative discretion in determining what is a "reasonable" rate, the word "reasonable" meaning not confiscatory, the determination of which is a judicial question.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 203 Fed. 864; affirmed in 239 U. S. 356, 60 L. ed. 327, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

§ 51. Creation and change of courts.

Places or terms, see post § 53.
Interchanging law and chancery powers, see post § 57.
Juvenile Court Act as class legislation, see post § 216.
Construction against encroachment on constitutional courts or their jurisdiction, see ante § 25.
Necessity of two-thirds vote to enact laws creating courts, see Statutes, I.
Constitutional courts and courts which legislature may establish by law, see Const., Art. VII, § 1.
Provision for establishment of courts of conciliation, see Const., Art. XVI, § 7.

¶ 235. The constitution vests the judicial power in certain specified courts, and it cannot legally be vested elsewhere.—Andrews v. Otsego Probate Judge, 74 Mich. 278.

¶ 236. The constitution having vested the whole judicial power of the state in certain specified courts and officers, and provided for the election of all judicial officers by the people, the legislature cannot confer any portion of such judicial power upon any officer not elective and not so specified.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139; Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 237. Courts of record other than those mentioned in § 1, Art. VII, of the Constitution of 1909, may be created by the legislature.—Attorney General ex rel. Danhof v. Renihan, 184 Mich. 272.

¶ 238. A joint resolution of the legislature authorizing the board of state auditors to investigate the claim of a person who was convicted of crime and after serving part of his sentence was pardoned, and to allow him certain compensation if the board found his claim of innocence to be true, was void as in effect establishing a court of appeals aside from constitutional courts, to determine the innocence or guilt of a convicted criminal.—Allen v. Board of State Auditors, 122 Mich. 324.

§ 52. ——Additional courts or judges.

See also post ¶ 1154.
As class legislation, see post § 222, ¶ 933.
Conferring jurisdiction belonging to another, see post § 54.
Changing or substituting judges, see post § 60.
Additional circuit judges and circuits, see Const. Art. VII, § 8.

¶ 239. It was the intent of the constitutional amendment of 1889, empowering the legislature to provide for the election of more than one circuit judge in the judicial circuit composed of the county of Kent, to place such additional judge under the provisions of the constitution and laws of the state applicable to existing circuit judges, and that his term of office should be limited and governed by the constitution, and that his successor should be chosen at the same time and in the same manner as the other circuit judges.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408.

¶ 240. The fact that the Supreme and circuit courts only are declared by § 17, Art.

VII, of the constitution to be courts of record, does not prevent the legislature from creating other courts of record, such as the superior court of the city of Grand Rapids,—Attorney General ex rel. Dunhof v. Kenihan, 184 Mich. 272.

¶ 241. Const., art. 6, § 17, providing that there shall be not exceeding four justices of the peace in each township, does not prescribe a minimum number, thus invalidating Local Acts 1905, No. 293, which provided for one municipal judge and one associate in the city of Battle Creek instead of the justices of the peace.—Attorney General ex rel. Hooper v. Loomis, 141 Mich. 547.

§ 53. Places or terms of court.

Regulation of venue, see post § 54.
Place for state suits in chancery, see post § 54.
Statute contingent on court room being provided, see post ¶ 450.
Formation of judicial circuits and territory to be included, see Courts, I.

¶ 242. It is not required by constitutional principles to hold the circuit courts solely at the county seats.—Whallon v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 51 Mich. 503.

¶ 243. Pub. Acts 1903, No. 31, § 3, regulating the practice of the law in the circuit court for the county of Wayne, and providing for the drawing of a fresh panel for the jury once in each calendar month, is not in conflict with Const., art. 6, § 11, since it neither abolishes the terms of court in such county, nor operates either to provide for twelve terms or for one continuous term of court each year.—Fornia v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 140 Mich. 631.

§ 54. Changing or conferring jurisdiction or venue.

Power over records, see also ante § 49.

Making distinctions as denial of equal protection of law, see post § 224, ¶ 950.
Total change as deprivation of office, see post § 271, ¶ 1173.

¶ 244. A judge of a newly created court cannot lawfully be clothed with the jurisdiction conferred by the constitution upon a constitutional officer.—Attorney General ex rel. Dingeman v. Lacy, 180 Mich. 329.

¶ 245. The judicial power vested in the circuit courts by the constitution cannot be reduced or divested to any extent that would impair their general authority over proceedings pending before them.—People ex rel. First Nat. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 Mich. 483.

¶ 246. Legislation cannot deprive the circuit court of its constitutional power of supervision of justices' courts by authorizing a municipal court to have jurisdiction of appeals therefrom.—Allen v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 474.

¶ 247. The constitutional jurisdiction of the circuit courts cannot be taken away by legislation.—Eddy v. Township of Lee, 73 Mich. 123.

¶ 247a. The assignment law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l) is unconstitutional as violating the limitations on judicial power, since it gives a judge at chambers power which only a court should exercise in the final disposition of the debtor's property.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 248. The constitutional jurisdiction of the circuit court cannot be interfered with by the legislature so as to give municipal or local courts like the superior court of Grand Rapids power to revise or change their action; as by authorizing the removal of causes from them after the hearing is begun.—Heath v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 372.

¶ 249. The legislature is not forbidden by the constitution to give jurisdiction to the circuit courts in cases where the amount claimed is less than $100.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 231.

¶ 250. Jurisdiction may be conferred upon the circuit court by the legislature, without regard to the amount involved.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. The Petrel, 153 Mich. 528.

¶ 251. Public Acts 1913, No. 186, creating a court of domestic relations in counties of 250,000 or over is unconstitutional as depriving circuit courts of Wayne county of appellate jurisdiction in certain enumerated cases.—Attorney General ex rel. Dingeman v. Lacy, 180 Mich. 329.

¶ 252. The question of the venue of actions is one within the power of the legislature.—Barnard v. Hinkley, 10 Mich. 458.

¶ 253. The constitution gives jurisdiction to the circuit courts over transitory actions upon contracts against non-residents of the state; and this jurisdiction cannot be taken away by any legislation limiting the forum of the action to the county in which the plaintiff resides.—Atkins v. Borstler, 46 Mich. 552.

¶ 254. The legislature has unquestionable power to provide that chancery suits on the part of or in behalf of the people of the state may, at the election of the attorney general, be commenced in the circuit court for the county of Ingham (How. St., § 6612); so held, upon a bill filed by that officer upon the relation of citizens and taxpayers of Cheboygan county to restrain an illegal issue of bonds by the board of supervisors of the latter county.—McMullen v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 608.

§ 55. ——Prerogative writs and revisory jurisdiction.

¶ 255. The constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to issue the writ of certiorari in cases where it is properly applicable cannot be abrogated by the legislature.—Specht v. City of Detroit, 20 Mich. 168; City of Detroit v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 63 Mich. 712; and see Tucker v. Parker, 50 Mich. 5.

¶ 256. The legislature has power to limit the time within which writs of certiorari may be issued.—Township of Blumfield v. Brown, 130 Mich. 504.

¶ 257. It is not competent for the legislature to deprive the Supreme Court of its revisory jurisdiction over all the other state tribunals, hence no legislation which practically destroys it is valid.—Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 258. The Supreme Court cannot, under the constitution, be vested with jurisdiction over cases reserved from the circuit courts, and not involving the exercise of appellate powers.—Sanger v. Truesdall, 8 Mich. 543; Jones v. Smith, 14 Mich. 334.

¶ 259. When the state government was organized, and the Supreme Court of the territory abolished, certain causes pending therein were not transferred to any court. It was held competent for the legislature to pass an act afterwards transferring these causes to the Supreme Court of the state.—Scott v. Smart's Ex'rs, 1 Mich. 295.

§ 56. ——Probate, municipal and justices' courts.

Encroachment on constitutional jurisdiction of other courts, see ante § 54.

Authorizing commissioner to act as probate judge in case of vacancy, see post ¶ 283d.

Empowering recorder or city officer to act as circuit court commissioner, see also post ¶ 287a.

Authorizing inheritance tax procedure at variance with existing probate practice, see post ¶ 300.

¶ 260. The legislature, by the constitution, Art. VII, § 13, providing that in each county organized for judicial purposes there shall be a probate court, and that the jurisdiction, powers and duties of such courts and the judges thereof shall be prescribed by law, is given plenary power to prescribe the powers and duties of the probate courts and judges thereof.—In re Merrill, 200 Mich. 244.

¶ 260a. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 238 How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12117, amending Comp. L. 1897, chap. 33, § 25, granting circuit courts original jurisdiction over probate contests upon certificate of the probate judge, is not invalid on the ground that the legislature has no power under the constitution, Art. VII. § 13, providing that in each county, there shall be a probate court with jurisdiction prescribed by law and § 10 providing that circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters not excepted in the constitution and not prohibited by law, and appellate jurisdiction from superior courts, and supervisory control of the same, to grant to the circuit courts original jurisdiction in the matter of will contests.—In re Rockett's Estate, 191 Mich. 499.

¶ 261. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 186, creating a court of domestic relations in counties of 250,000 or over is unconstitutional in depriving probate courts of their constitutional jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents and dependents in certain cases.—Attorney General ex rel. Dingeman v. Lacy, 180 Mich. 329.

¶ 262. Const., art. 6, § 1, does not require every municipal court to have both civil and criminal jurisdiction. It is for the legislature to fix the extent of such a court's authority, subject to the restriction that it must not exceed that which properly pertains to a municipal court.—People ex rel. Covell v. Kent County Treasurer, 36 Mich. 332; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 263. Whether or not it is competent to give a municipal court a jurisdiction equal in all respects with that of the circuit court, it is certainly not competent to subordinate the jurisdiction of the latter to that of the former.—People ex rel. Jones v. Kent Circuit Judge, 35 Mich. 494.

¶ 264. The constitution does not forbid giving to a municipal court original jurisdiction of crimes committed within the municipality.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 265. The legislature has power to determine the extent of the power of a municipal court, except that the power granted must not exceed that which can properly pertain to a municipal court.—Dunham v. Tilma, 191 Mich. 688.

¶ 266. Municipal courts cannot be authorized to try extra-municipal crimes.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 267. The Superior Court of Grand Rapids, established by Laws 1875, Act No. 49 (see How. St., §§ 6564-6591), is authorized by the constitution; and the county of Kent was liable for jury fees therein.—People ex rel. Covell v. Kent County Treasurer, 36 Mich. 332.

¶ 268. Laws 1875, Act No. 49, was invalid so far as it gave the Grand Rapids superior court jurisdiction of transitory actions on service upon any defendant in the city, whether any of the parties resided there or not.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461.

¶ 269. How. St., § 6576, conferring on the superior court of Grand Rapids exclusive jurisdiction over suits by or against city officers is valid under Const., art. 6, §§ 1, 8, since the power is there given to prohibit it to the circuit court "by law."—Chicago & W. M. R. Co. v. Nester, 63 Mich. 657.

¶ 270. How. St., § 6576, granting jurisdiction to the superior court of Grand Rapids is constitutional though the subjects would otherwise have been within jurisdiction of the circuit court.—Chicago & W. M. R. Co. v. Nester, 63 Mich. 657.

¶ 271. It is competent, under art. 6, § 1, of the constitution, for the legislature to vest in the police court of a city exclusive jurisdiction to hear, try and determine all criminal cases triable by a justice of the peace, where the offense charged was committed within the corporate limits of the city.—Perrott v. Pierce, 75 Mich. 578.

¶ 272. So much of Local Acts 1887, No. 435, as attempts to deprive justices of the peace of Bay City of exercising concurrent jurisdiction with the police justice in the apprehension and examination of persons charged with offenses not cognizable by justices of the peace under the general statutes of the state, is unconstitutional, inasmuch as Const., art. 6, § 19 declares that justices of the peace shall be conservators of the peace within their several jurisdictions.—Averill v. Perrott, 74 Mich. 296.

¶ 273. A justice who lives in a village that lies in two townships can be authorized by statute to hold court in criminal cases in that part of the village that lies in the township he does not live in.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 274. Const., art. 6, § 18, fixing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace and setting a limited amount in which their jurisdiction shall be exclusive, and a sum within which it shall be concurrent, does not prohibit the legislature from conferring on a municipal court created in Battle Creek by Local Acts 1905, No. 392, the same jurisdiction.—Attorney General ex rel. Hooper v. Loomis, 141 Mich. 547.

¶ 275. There is no constitutional prohibition upon the legislature against conferring upon one justice of the peace exclusive civil and criminal jurisdiction in cities over cases arising in the city or between residents of the city.—Striffing v. Baden, 155 Mich. 49.

¶ 276. Whether a city charter can constitutionally deprive justices of the peace of all criminal jurisdiction by making that of the police justice exclusive, quære.—People v. Pond, 67 Mich. 98.

¶ 277. Although a justice of the peace is a constitutional officer with judicial power, the constitution (art. 6, § 18) also provides that magistrates "shall have such criminal jurisdiction and perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the legislature," and since no mention of fees to be paid to justices of the peace is made, the legislature has power, in cases where the people are a party, to prescribe the duties of the magistrate as it did in How. St., § 7135a, and also to provide that in case of neglect or refusal to perform his duty, he shall not have the fees otherwise provided by law.—Sunderlin v. Ionia County Sup'rs, 119 Mich. 535.

§ 57. ——Changing law and chancery powers.

Statute creating proceeding at law in aid of execution, see post ¶ 808.

Laws giving remedy excluding right to jury, see post § 192.

¶ 278. The judicial power includes the cognizance of equitable questions and the system of chancery jurisprudence; therefore Pub. Acts 1887, No. 267, is unconstitutional in so far as it assumes to provide for a final decision of questions of fact in chancery suits by the verdict of a jury, and for the rejection of testimony by the presiding judge as in a suit at law.—Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 279. The legislature cannot abridge the right of courts of chancery to pass upon questions of fact without the intervention of a jury.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Blodgett, 115

Mich. 160; reaffirming and adhering to Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 280. Laws 1850, No. 161, § 2 (Comp. L. 1897, § 5593), imposing liability for injuries caused by dogs, and providing that in an action of trespass on the case, "the plaintiff and defendant may be examined under oath touching the matter at issue, and evidence may be given as in other cases; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, by the evidence, that the defendant is justly liable for the damages complained of under the provisions of this act, the court shall render judgment against such defendant for double the amount of damages proved, and costs of suit," is not unconstitutional as conferring upon the circuit judge power to act as a chancellor in a suit at law, in doubling damages, as the liability is declared to be double the damages sustained, and the presumption is that such damages will be ascertained as in ordinary cases—by the jury, in a trial before a jury, and by the court, when the jury is dispensed with. The word "court" in the quoted portion of the statute may be construed to mean the court acting through all of its instrumentalities, including the jury. —Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675; writ of error dismissed in 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

¶ 281. The legislature may limit the power of a court in chancery to set aside decrees in tax proceedings.—Cole v. Auditor General, 132 Mich. 262.

¶ 282. Inasmuch as it is not unconstitutional to confer upon courts of law jurisdiction similar to that of chancery in setting aside conveyances of land for fraud—this not being a case where equity is deprived of jurisdiction, or where the nature of a court of chancery is sought to be changed, or where a party is deprived of a constitutional right to an equitable remedy—How. St., § 8059. permitting the validity of conveyances of property to be questioned and tried by jury and to form the basis of a garnishee's liability, is valid.—Webber v. Hayes, 117 Mich 256.

§ 58. ——Conferring power on commissioners of courts.

Conferring power to admit to bail in criminal cases, see ante § 173a.

Giving commissioner's power to recorder or city officer, see post § 59, ¶ 287a.

¶ 283. Circuit court commissioners may be empowered by statute to dissolve attachments.—Edgarton v. Hinchman, 7 Mich. 352; Smith v. Collins, 41 Mich. 173; Schall v. Bly, 43 Mich. 401.

¶ 283a. The provision in the tax law of 1858 which attempts to confer upon commissioners the power to adjudicate upon tax titles is unconstitutional and void.—Waldby v. Callendar, 8 Mich. 430; Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12.

¶ 283b. The statute empowering commissioners to entertain summary proceedings to recover possession of lands is not unconstitutional.—Streeter v. Paton, 7 Mich. 341.

¶ 283d. The provision in R. S. 1846, ch. 91, § 16, authorizing a commissioner to act as probate judge in certain cases of vacancy, held valid.—Kelley v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 210.

¶ 284. The Fraudulent Debtors' Act (How. St., ch. 304), does not, because of the power it confers upon circuit court commissioners, contravene Const., art. 6, § 1, vesting the judicial power in certain courts and in justices of the peace.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

¶ 285. The judicial power to determine what evidence is relevant to an issue at law, sought to be conferred upon circuit court commissioners by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 181, authorizing the examination of a plaintiff or defendant before a commissioner, at the instance of the adverse party, as to facts "relevant to the issues involved," and giving testimony so taken the force of evidence, without providing for a review by the court of the rulings made on the examination, is in excess of the constitutional power of such commissioners.—Mulhern v. Kent Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 528.

¶ 286. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 312, providing for the establishment of juvenile courts, and giving power inter alia to issue summonses and warrants, "or upon conviction" to impose fines, to suspend sentences, to place children on probation and to terminate such probation, and to make and enforce decrees for the support of children by their parents, calls for judicial proceedings by a court; and such powers cannot be conferred on circuit court commissioners under Const., art. 6, § 16, which limits their judicial powers to "those of a judge of a circuit court at chambers."—Hunt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 142 Mich. 93.

§ 59. ——Giving power to nonjudicial officers.

Imposing nonjudicial functions on courts, see ante § 39.

Objection that misplacing judicial power denies due process, see post ¶¶ 698, 699.

¶ 287. The act of Feb. 14, 1853, "to provide for the discharge of certain duties required to be performed by circuit court commissioners," in so far as it undertakes to confer judicial powers upon notaries public in certain cases, is unconstitutional.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409.

¶ 287a. The legislature cannot constitutionally confer the powers of a circuit court commissioner upon the recorder of a city or other city officer.—McClintock v. Laing, 19 Mich. 300.

¶ 288. A statute conferring on the clerk of a court power to issue warrants for arrest for crime is invalid as an attempt to confer on the clerk judicial power, to-wit: The determination whether the complaint is sufficient to support a warrant.—People v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529; People v. Colleton, 59 Mich. 573.

¶ 289. Laws 1881, Act No. 150 (How. St., § 978), exempting from jury duty contributing members in companies and batteries of state troops, is not open to the objection that it confers upon military officers an arbitrary power of setting aside the authority of courts to compel attendance of qualified jurors.—Hall v. Burlingame, 88 Mich. 438.

¶ 290. A statutory provision (Laws 1887, Act No. 205, § 57), that the receiver of a bank shall make ratable dividends of moneys collected on all claims proved to his satisfaction, does not conflict with Const., Art. 6 § 1, vesting the judicial power in courts; the receiver is merely a special tribunal to determine claims, subject to review by the court which appoints him.—Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472.

¶ 291. Pub. Acts 1903, No. 217, governing insane asylums and the admission of insane persons therein, does not confer judicial powers upon keepers of asylums because it prohibits their holding a patient "except upon certificates of insanity and an order for admission."—Grinky v. Wayne Probate Judge, 137 Mich. 49.

¶ 292. Public Acts 1903, No. 217, governing insane asylums and admission of insane persons and providing that no person shall be admitted except upon certificate of insanity made by two reputable physicians, is not unconstitutional because making the authority of the probate court to commit to the asylum dependent upon certificates made by nonjudicial persons, since the act merely prescribes a rule of evidence.—Grinky v. Wayne Probate Judge, 137 Mich. 49.

¶ 293. Administrative, not judicial, power is vested in the board of supervisors by How. St., § 2283b1, which authorizes such board, in case any election district refuses or neglects to hold an election on a local option law, or in case the returns from any district are withheld, to proceed with the canvass of the votes actually returned, where the board is satisfied that the failure to vote or make return is for the purpose of preventing a full expression of the will of the electors upon the proposition submitted.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 294. The power conferred on the state commissioner of labor by Act No. 301, Pub. Acts 1913, to revoke after a hearing any license granted a private employment agency, is not of such an arbitrary or judicial character as to invalidate the act.—People v. Brazee, 183 Mich. 259, affirmed in 241 U. S. 340, 60 L. ed. 1034, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

¶ 295. Whether the jurisdiction given by the charter of Grand Haven to the recorder of that city is constitutional and valid, quere. —Thompson v. Crockery School Dist. No. 7, 25 Mich. 483.

§ 60. Changing and substituting judges.

New or additional judges, see ante § 52.

Authorizing successor to act, see also post ¶ 299.

Creation and abolishment of offices, see also post § 261.

¶ 296. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 152, which authorizes the governor, when business has accumulated in any of the circuit courts of the state beyond the capacity of the local judge properly to dispose of it, to designate a judge of some other circuit to hold court in the former circuit temporarily, is valid under Const., art. 6, § 11, providing that the circuit judges may hold courts for each other, and shall do so when required by law.—In re Bromley's Estate, 113 Mich. 53.

¶ 297. Act 456, Local Acts 1887, which authorizes either of the Wayne circuit judges to act as judge of the recorder's court of Detroit on request of the recorder, etc., is constitutional so far as it affects cases of which the circuit court had original jurisdiction before the passage of the act.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512.

§ 61. Establishment and change of procedure.

General power of legislature respecting procedure, see post VIII, and cross-references there found.

Establishing presumptions and rules of evidence or of inference, see also post § 187.
Power to authorize waiver of tort and suit on contract, see also post § 187, ¶ 802.
Legislative grant of rehearing, new trial or relief from judgment, see also ante § 38, ¶ 184.
Legislative power to deny injunction or equitable remedy where legal remedy remains, see also post § 236.
Power of legislature to cure errors by subsequent legislation, see post §§ 249-251.
Power of legislature to pass curative act pending suit based on defect, see post § 251.

¶ 298. Any change which transfers the power that belongs to a judge to a jury, or to any other person or body is a violation of the constitution.—Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 299. The legislature has power to authorize the settlement of a bill of exceptions by the successor in office of the judge who tried the cause.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 300. The inheritance tax, provided in Pub. Acts 1899, No. 188, is not unconstitutional because of providing for a collection of the tax by methods not in use in the probate court.—Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 487.

¶ 301. The provisions of the charter of the City of Detroit, pars. 290, 201, 292, limiting the jurisdiction and practice of the recorder's court of the City of Detroit and giving it no power to order the summoning of a grand jury do not contravene any constitutional provision.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 302. The question of the power of the Supreme Court to modify a statutory enactment as to practice coming within the purview of the constitution art. 6, § 5, conferring power on the court to establish and modify rules of practice by rule of court was left open in Byrne v. Gypsum Plaster & Stucco Co., 141 Mich. 62.

§ 62. Jury laws and jurors.

As to grand jury, see also ante ¶ 301.
Legislative invasion of chancery functions by enactment of jury laws, see ante § 57.
Local and general concerns in jury system, see post § 68.
General power of legislature, see post §§ 192, 209.

¶ 303. Laws 1881, Act No. 150 (How. St., § 978), exempting from jury duty contributing members in companies, etc., of state troops, is constitutional, it being the province of the legislature, not of the courts, to determine the qualifications of jurors, and to provide who shall be exempt.—Hall v. Burlingame, 88 Mich. 438.

§ 63. Contempts and contempt procedure.

Jurisdiction and power of courts over contempts, including their inherent powers, see Contempt, III.

¶ 304. Whether the authority of the judiciary to punish for contempt of court can be limited by statute, quære.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

¶ 305. Under Const., art. III, § 2, providing that "no person belonging to one department shall exercise powers properly belonging to another, except in cases expressly provided in this constitution," the legislature has no control over the power of the circuit court to punish for contempt, there being no provision in the constitution which expressly or impliedly confers upon the legislature any control over this power.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 130 Mich. 187.

¶ 305a. The legislature has power to authorize the punishment of contempt of court committed while the court was considering the allowance of a claim filed by a coroner for an inquest upon a stranger, the cost of which is by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 11828, paid by the state where allowed by the circuit court.—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

§ 64. Arrests and prosecutions for crime.

As to grand jury, see also ante ¶ 301.
Conferring jurisdiction on minor courts, see ante § 56.
Necessity that court given jurisdiction have means of trying according to constitution, see also post ¶ 871.
Fixing venue for trial of transitory crime as denying jury of vicinage, see post § 210.
Municipal charters invading powers of prosecuting attorney, see also post ¶ 430.
General power as affected by constitutional guaranties, see post IX, and cross-references there found.
Constitutional office and functions of prosecuting attorney, see also Attorneys, ¶ 245.

¶ 306. The power to examine and commit persons charged with crime is not judicial, but is one of the duties of conservators of the peace, and it may be vested in other persons than courts; and those in whom it is vested by the constitution cannot be deprived of it by legislation.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 307. The power to take bail is not a judicial power within the meaning of Const., art. 6, § 1.—Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

¶ 308. In a criminal case the preparation for and conduct of the trial on behalf of the people are acts executive and administrative in character.—People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148.

¶ 309. Section 3, Act No. 175, Pub. Acts 1905, gave the court power in homicide cases to appoint experts to investigate and testify where the issues involved expert knowledge or opinion. Held said section 3 was unconstitutional, as depriving the prosecuting attorney of his administrative function in selecting witnesses, as preventing the defendant from learning the names of the witnesses against him, and as tending to give too great weight to the testimony of such experts.—People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148.

§ 65. Custody and control of prisons and prisoners.

As to pardons and paroles, see post § 66.

¶ 310. The legislature has full authority over prisons, and to determine where prisoners may be sent; and the courts have no discretion, except as the legislature gives it, as to the place to which criminals may be sentenced; accordingly the selection of a prison for confinement and the transfer of the prisoner thence to another prison is not a judicial act.—Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436.

¶ 311. Laws 1893, Act No. 150, empowering the governor to transfer prisoners from one prison to another, is valid, at least as to convicts sentenced subsequently; and does not infringe on judicial powers of sentencing for crime.—Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436.

¶ 312. A prisoner applies for and obtains release under the terms provided for in the statute, which terms are of the very essence of the indeterminate sentence law. Without the power to retake the prisoner there would be no incentive to good behavior through fear of being imprisoned again. The power of release and recall may be vested in any officer or board without any interference with judicial or executive constitutional authority.—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

§ 66. Pardons and paroles.

Powers respecting arrests and prisons, see ante §§ 64, 65.

Effect of constitutional amendment to make indeterminate sentence law a proper legislative act, see ante § 33.

Conferring power on state auditors to compensate person unjustly convicted and imprisoned, see ante ¶ 238.

Pardoning power, see Const., art. VI, § 9.

¶ 313. How. St., §§ 9630-9633, held unconstitutional and void so far as authorizing the summary reception, without bail or preliminary examination, of a convict charged with violating the condition of his pardon given by commuting his sentence.—People v. Moore, 62 Mich. 496.

¶ 314. A statute that in effect gives the board of control of prisons power to grant convicts pardon upon conditions, encroaches upon the powers of the governor, and is void.—People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249.

¶ 315. 316. Laws of 1889, Act No. 228 (How. St., §§ 9613b-9613g), providing for indeterminate sentences, and the disposition, management and release of criminals under such sentence, is invalid in that it contravenes Const., art. 6, § 1 and § 5, by giving the board of control of prisons judicial and pardoning powers, such powers being vested by the constitution in the courts and the governor exclusively.—People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249.

¶ 317. Const., art. 5, § 11, which vests the pardoning power exclusively in the governor, "subject to regulations provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons," is not infringed by Laws 1893, Act No. 150, providing for an advisory board in the matter of pardons.—Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436.

¶ 318. The board of pardons has no constitutional right to question, examine into, or determine the justice of a sentence, or to question the propriety of the conviction. This power is by the constitution vested exclusively in the courts.—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

¶ 319. Under the constitutional amendment (art. 4, § 47) and the indeterminate sentence law enacted thereunder, the legislature may confer upon the governor, the warden, the prison boards, and the board of pardons the power to determine whether the conduct of a prisoner is such that he may safely be released, and to determine whether he has departed from his criminal ways and become a good citizen, or whether he has violated his parole. The power to determine the conditions of release and the violation of release is not judicial.—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

C. LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

§ 67. In general; policy of constitution.

Protection of municipal property from deprivation without due process, see post § 137.

General provisions of constitution as to local government, see Const., Art. VIII.

¶ 320. It is a fundamental principle, recognized and perpetuated by express provisions of the constitution, that the people of every hamlet, town and village in the state are entitled to the benefits of local self-government; the constitution, however, has not pointed out the precise extent of local powers and capacities, but has left them to be determined in each case by the legislative authority of the state from considerations of general policy as well as from those which pertain to local benefits and local desires.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 321. In conferring local powers the legislature may give extensive capacity to acquire or hold property for local purposes, or it may confine the authority within narrow bounds, and what it thus confers it may enlarge, restrict or take away at pleasure.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 322. The general power of the legislature over local municipal affairs considered but not decided.—People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44.

¶ 323. Under our system there can be no governments, general or special, that do not immediately represent a popular constituency, and governmental power cannot be vested elsewhere.—Detroit Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne County Auditors, 68 Mich. 576.

¶ 324. The fundamental and necessary characteristics of the various classes of municipal bodies which administer local government in Michigan cannot be changed by legislation from what they were as fixed by usage and recognition when the constitution was adopted.—Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 325. Municipal government, under our constitution, must be managed by popular representatives and agencies deriving their authority from the inhabitants, and no municipal business can be controlled by state or other outside authorities.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 326. There can be no municipal corporation that is not the direct representative of the people of its locality.—O'Leary v. Board of Fire & Water Commissioners of City of Marquette, 79 Mich. 281.

§ 68. Matters of general or local concern.

Matters of health, see also post ¶¶ 343, 487.
Drainage matters, see post § 84.
Local nature of office, see post § 74; and see also Officers, I.
Salaries and compensation of officers, see post § 76.

¶ 327. In all matters of general concern there is no local right in municipal corporations to act independently of the state, and the local authorities cannot determine for themselves whether they will contribute through taxation to the support of the state government, or assist when called upon to suppress insurrections, or aid in the enforcement of police laws. On all such subjects the state may exercise compulsory authority, and may enforce the performance of local duties either by employing local officers for the purpose, or through agents or officers of its own appointment.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 328. The state has no right to interfere with and control by compulsory legislation, the action of municipal corporations in regard to property rights and matters of exclusively local concern.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 329. The administration of criminal law concerns the state and not merely localities; and the selection of jurors in criminal cases is a duty that is not necessarily of a local administrative character. It may be done by officers authorized by the legislature and appointed by the governor; and the legislature may require the county in which such officers act to pay their expenses.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48.

Change or reduction of county territory, see Const., Art. VIII, § 2.

¶ 329a. Under Const., art. X, § 2, providing that no county shall be reduced by the organization of "new" counties, to less than sixteen townships without a vote of the people, the legislature cannot reduce a county to fifteen townships by taking territory from it and attaching it to an existing county.—Bay County Sup'rs v. Edmunds, 139 Mich. 466.

¶ 330. Local Acts 1905, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit is not unconstitutional as depriving the people of a portion of the annexed territory of their right of local self-government in their village and school matters.—Attorney General ex rel. Battishill v. Township Board of Springwells, 143 Mich. 523.

§ 70. Local taxation and fiscal affairs.

Regulation of deposit of public funds, see also ante § 49.

Taxes for purposes not wholly local, see post § 71.

Liquor taxes, see also post § 79.

¶ 331. The power to tax is the highest that can exist in local municipal government, and the most unquestionable of fundamental principles is that the people shall vote the taxes they are to pay or be permitted to choose representatives for the purpose.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 332. There is nothing in the maxim that "taxation and representation go together" that requires that the body paying the tax shall alone be consulted in its assessment.—People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

¶ 333. Ways cannot be laid out or taxes levied therefor except by persons chosen in the community to be burdened, and acting either alone or in state or county representative bodies.—Drain Com'rs v. Baxter, 57 Mich. 127.

¶ 334. It is competent for the legislature to authorize a township board, without obtaining the consent of the electors, to issue bonds to pay outstanding orders that are presumptively valid.—Boyce v. Auditor General, 90 Mich. 314, on rehearing 90 Mich. 326.

¶ 335. Local Acts 1889, Act No. 376, authorizing the Roscommon township board to issue township bonds to pay outstanding orders, is not mandatory, and is not to be regarded as intended to include all orders, irrespective of their validity, but only such as the township board should regard as valid; and hence was held constitutional.—Boyce v. Auditor General, 90 Mich. 314, on rehearing 90 Mich. 326.

¶ 336. Local Acts 1897, No. 342, providing for the construction of a bridge in a given township, and for the contribution of $4,000 by the township in which the bridge is to be built, of $500 each by two other townships, and of $5,000 by the county, one-half of said amounts to be raised by taxation in one year and the other half in the year following, destroys local self-government; since the matter is covered by Const., art. 10, § 9, authorizing the board of supervisors to borrow or raise by tax $1,000 for constructing or repairing bridges, but providing that no greater sum shall be borrowed or raised by tax in any one year unless authorized by a majority of the electors voting thereon; and it cannot be sustained by Const., art. 10, § 11, authorizing the board to provide for constructing bridges under such restrictions and limitations "as shall be prescribed by law." The argument that the bridge was a necessity has no bearing on the constitutionality of the act.—Township of Ada v. Kent Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 77.

¶ 337. Local Acts 1903, No. 534, authorizing the issuing of bonds for paving and providing for an assessment to pay interest and principal, is not unconstitutional as an invasion of the right of local self-government, as it imposes the duty upon the local township board, to whose duties it is germane.—Township of Grosse Pointe v. Finn, 134 Mich. 529.

¶ 338. The act establishing the board of state tax commissioners is not unconstitutional as depriving constitutional officers of their powers, or municipalities of their local regulation of taxation matters.—Board of State Tax Commissioners v. Quinn, 125 Mich. 128.

¶ 339. The fact that the duty of making assessments was reposed in the supervisor by the law in force prior to the constitution of 1850, and that supervisors were provided for by the constitution, does not import that the exclusive agency for making assessments was in the supervisor; and since Pub. Acts 1899, No. 154, does not withdraw wholly from the supervisor this duty and in any event the act only provided for supervision and correction of the work of the supervisor, it is valid and therefore the state board had the power to make revision of the local assessment.—Board of State Tax Commissioners v. Board of Assessors of Grand Rapids, 124 Mich. 491, followed in Detroit United Ry. v. Board of State Tax Com'rs, 136 Mich. 96.

¶ 340. Public Acts 1899, No. 154, empowering the board of state tax commissioners to supervise assessment rolls, is not unconstitutional as interfering with local self-government in cities and townships.—Board of State Tax Commissioners v. Board of Assessors of Grand Rapids, 124 Mich. 491; Detroit United Ry. v. Board of State Tax Com'rs, 136 Mich. 96.

§ 71. ——Taxation for purposes not local.

Fire and police department taxes, see post § 78.

¶ 341. A statute cannot extend the powers of a local police board of a city so as to enable it to draw from the funds of the county to carry on its own work in townships adjacent to the city, and at the expense as well of the municipalities where none of the money is spent as of those patrolled.—Detroit Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne County Auditors, 68 Mich. 576.

¶ 342. The Wayne County Juvenile Court Act of 1907 (Local Acts No. 684) is not unconstitutional in that it provides for a court limited in its jurisdiction over children of the City of Detroit, while the expense of the establishment and maintenance of the court is imposed in part on the City of Detroit and in part on the County of Wayne.—Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 151 Mich. 315.

¶ 343. Laws 1895, Act No. 10, entitled "An act to establish a board of health for the City of Detroit, is not unconstitutional in that it authorizes the board of health to require money to be raised by an annual tax for local purposes without the consent of any local officers or of the boards of the city; the preservation of the public health is not a local purpose, and the consent of the locality is not material, where the function is a public or general one.—Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 344. Local Acts 1899, Act 408, § 9, directing the board established by section 10 to fix water rates, to prepare and transmit to the Detroit Common Council an estimate of the amount they deemed a just proportion of the total estimate for maintenance as a reasonable charge for furnishing water for domestic and other purposes specified, and making it the duty of the common council to levy and assess upon the taxable property of the city a sum so fixed, and not providing that it shall be submitted to the board of estimates or to a vote of the freemen of the city, is unconstitutional and void as imposing taxation for a purely local purpose without the action of the freemen of the city or their chosen representatives.—Blades v. Board of Water Com'rs of Detroit, 122 Mich. 366.

¶ 345. It is not unconstitutional for the legislature to provide, as in Local Acts 1903, No. 501, that the township treasurer pay over to a village treasurer the money raised by a bond issue by the township for the specific purpose of improving a highway, subsequently incorporated into the village.—Paye v. Township of Grosse Pointe, 134 Mich. 524.

§ 72. Schools and education.

Making other officer member of board of education, see post ¶ 377.

¶ 346. The legislature has power to change the boundaries of school districts without reimbursing the portion of the district deprived of the use of the public property owned by the districts from which the new district was formed.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

¶ 347. Local Acts 1901, No. 315, creating a new school district from the territory of existing districts, giving to it the property of the old districts within its limits, temporarily fixing the site of the central school house and appointing its first trustees, and providing that the township school inspectors should attach to other districts the portions not included in the new, is not invalid as impairing the right to local self-government.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

¶ 348. Local Acts 1901, No. 315, incorporating a graded school district and fixing its boundaries, is not void because it designated one of the sites already located as the site of the central schoolhouse, even if that was beyond legislative power; since such provision may be held to be directory merely, and was in any case not designed to prevent future action by the board.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

¶ 349. The fact that the legislature in creating a new school district out of existing districts, left certain parts of the territory out and provided that the township school inspectors should attach it to other districts, does not invalidate the act since the legislature had power itself to attach it to specific districts.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

§ 73. Township organization and officers.

Creation and abolishment of offices in general, see post §§ 261, 262.

¶ 350. The functions of township officers who are continued by constitutional enactment are within the contemplation and protection of the constitution, and the legislature cannot deprive such officers of their authority and confer it upon officers not of local selection.—Davies v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 295.

¶ 351. Const., art. 11, § 1, provides for the annual election, in organized townships, of commissioners and overseers of townships, and art. 10, § 11, provides that the board of supervisors of each county may provide for laying out highways. Held, that act 314 of the laws of 1889, which provides that certain townships in Saginaw county shall constitute two road districts, and that the board of supervisors shall elect three commissioners who shall have the care, etc., of highways, is void, because it divests local officers of their constitutional functions.—Davies v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 295.

¶ 352. Township highways and other local interests cannot be taken from the custody of the proper local officers.—People ex rel. Hubbard v. Township Board of Springwells, 25 Mich. 153.

¶ 353. A statute authorizing a given township to construct and maintain a bridge across a navigable stream that separates it from another township is not open to the objection that it seeks to divest the highway commissioner of such other township of his constitutional powers.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

§ 74. Designation or appointment of local officers.

Of offices in general, see post § 266.

Appointments for interim and extensions of terms for temporary period, see post § 75.

State or municipal character of office, see Officers, I; Municipal Corporations, XV.

¶ 354. The people of a municipality cannot be subjected to any delegated powers of government not exercised by their own representatives.—Detroit Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne County Auditors, 68 Mich. 570.

¶ 355. It was held that the functions of the park commissioners of the City of Detroit, appointed by Laws 1871, Act No. 277, were local and municipal, and that their selection could not be properly made without the assent of the people or authorities of the locality.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Lothrop, 24 Mich. 235.

¶ 356. Under the act of Congress (24 U. S. St. at L., 147), authorizing the construction of Belle Isle bridge the common council of the City of Detroit has full control thereof, as though such bridge was a street in such city, which must be exercised by ordinances, and these may authorize the hiring and fix the compensation of such employees as the council deems expedient; and so much of Local L. 1889, Act No. 388, § 11, as conflicts with this right is invalid.—Commissioners of Parks v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 663.

¶ 357. Vesting the power to appoint a park commissioner in the city council instead of in the mayor is not an interference with the right of self-government.—Attorney General ex rel. Maybury v. Bolger, 128 Mich. 355.

¶ 358. The power to nominate all city officers of the City of Detroit was not vested in the mayor at the time of the adoption of the constitution of 1850 so as to deprive the legislature of the power to delegate appointive power to the common council.—Attorney General ex rel. Maybury v. Bolger, 128 Mich. 355.

¶ 359. A drain commissioner is not a local officer, but one exercising public functions on behalf of the state under and by virtue of its police powers. His appointment is not in contravention of the principle of local self-government because the legislature can provide that his appointment be made by state authority.—Attorney General ex rel. Alexander, v. McClear, 146 Mich. 45.

¶ 360. Local Acts 1905, No. 592, § 5, providing for the appointment of a drain commissioner for Livingston county by the governor of the state is not unconstitutional as contravening the right of local self-government.—Attorney General ex rel. Alexander v. McClear, 146 Mich. 45.

¶ 361. Public Acts 1905, No. 146, § 6, providing for the appointment of a county road commissioner for Wayne county by the county clerk and the mayor of Detroit is unconstitutional on the ground that it conflicts with the theory of local self-government guaranteed by the constitution.—Board of Road Com'rs of Wayne County v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 148 Mich. 255.

§ 75. ——Interim appointment or continuance.

Vacancy appointment of superior judge, see also ante ¶ 212a.

Presumption as to exigency requiring provisional appointment, see ante § 24.

¶ 362. It is competent for the legislature, in dividing two city wards into four, to continue the aldermen in office for the rest of the term in the wards in which they may reside by such division; and the result is a vacancy in a ward in which only one or no aldermen reside, which may be filled at the next election.—Stow v. Common Council of City of Grand Rapids, 79 Mich. 595.

¶ 363. Local Acts 1889, No. 374 (p. 877), creating two new wards in Grand Rapids and providing that the aldermen should continue in office until their elective terms should expire, may properly be upheld, the same not constituting an appointment of city officers by the legislature, and as making sufficient provision for the election of aldermen in the new wards.—Stow v. Common Council of City of Grand Rapids, 79 Mich. 595.

¶ 364. Under Local Acts 1901, No. 284, the provision for an appointment by the governor of a provisional local superintendent of public works for the City of Detroit and the abolition of the local board of public works is invalid as far as the governor's power of appointment is concerned as encroaching on local government, for the reason that the facts show no exigency existing for a provisional appointment and the power of the mayor to fill a vacancy at any time confirms this lack of necessity of a gubernatorial appointment.—Moreland v. Millen, 126 Mich. 381.

¶ 365. Local Acts 1901, No. 284, providing for a so-called "provisional" appointment of a superintendent of public works for Detroit, displacing when qualified and inducted the existing board of public works, and providing that the provisional appointment shall be made by the governor for a term certain and thereafter by the mayor, or by the mayor sooner if a vacancy should occur, is void as far as it makes an unnecessary encroachment on the power to appoint local officers for which no exigency appears as a warrant for legislative action.—Moreland v. Millen, 126 Mich. 381.

§ 76. Duties and compensation of local officers.

Officers in general, see post §§ 268, 269.
Interference with function of city council, see post § 77.
In respect to streets and other public places, see also post §§ 80-84.
Delegation of power to cities, see post § 88.
Duties and compensation of county officers, see Const., Art. VIII, §§ 3-5, 8-10.

¶ 366. A representative is one chosen by a principal to exercise for him a power, or perform for him a trust, and the right to be represented implies a right not merely to name the representative but to designate the trust. A person authorized by a city to represent it for one purpose cannot be clothed by the state with authority in purely local matters to represent it for another and different purpose for which the state had no power to appoint him originally.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 367. The legislature has authority to modify the powers and duties of existing local officers. But the changes and modifications, when they relate to matters which concern the private interests and property of the city, must be in the same general direction, and not give authority of other and a higher nature, which might require for its exercise different experience, intelligence, capacity and discretion.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 368. The imposition of quasi legislative duties upon a municipal board of public works (in Detroit) in addition to its general duties, which were of a purely administrative character, was held not important so long as the general legislative authority of the common council was not interfered with; some authority of a quasi legislative nature is essential to the efficient exercise of even purely administrative powers.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 Mich. 108.

¶ 369. Local legislative authority is not infringed by having boards or other executive servants to do, under proper conditions, what is not legislative work.—Butler v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 552.

¶ 370. A probate judge is a state, not a county, officer, and under the constitution his salary cannot be controlled by the board of supervisors, which has at most the delegated power of fixing the salary once, and cannot change it, if at all, until the legislature directs.—People ex rel. Douvielle v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 585; Chapman v. Berrien County, 50 Mich. 311.

¶ 371. Const., art. 10, § 10, does not give the Wayne county board of auditors power to fix the compensation of its members, and a statute fixing salaries is valid.—People ex rel. Kennedy v. Gies, 25 Mich. 83.

¶ 372. Const., art. 10, § 10, providing that the board of supervisors or auditors, shall have the exclusive power to fix compensation does not operate to render the legislature powerless to legislate on the subject. —Board of Auditors of Wayne Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 99.

¶ 373. The people of the state, as well as Wayne county, have an interest in the performance by the county clerk of services rendered under the marriage license law, requiring reports to the secretary of state of licenses issued. In such case, it is entirely competent for the legislature to provide the compensation for the service, and when a claim is presented to the county auditor, showing the performance of the services, and the proper fees, they must allow such claim. —Board of Auditors of Wayne County v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 99.

¶ 374. Local Acts 1895, No. 425, fixing the salary of the county clerk of Wayne county, is not unconstitutional, although Const., art. 10, § 10, provides that the compensation of county officers shall be fixed by the board of county auditors, as such constitutional provision refers only to services rendered to the county.—Board of Auditors of Wayne County v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 99.

¶ 375. It is competent for the legislature to provide, as it did in 1863 (Laws of 1863, p. 332), that the salary of the clerk of the police court of Detroit should be prescribed by the common council of Detroit, notwithstanding it was payable by the county of Wayne; and the county board of auditors could not reduce the salary after the common council had fixed it.—People ex rel. Schmittdiel v. Wayne County Auditors, 13 Mich. 233.

¶ 376. Local self-government is not infringed by Laws 1881, Act No. 160 (How. St., §§ 7623-7630), authorizing jurors in criminal trials to be drawn by a board of jury commissioners appointed by the governor.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48.

¶ 377. The legislature has power to make the mayor of a city an ex officio member of the board of education and to give him the veto power.—Pingree v. Board of Education of Detroit, 99 Mich. 404.

¶ 378. A statute divesting a city supervisor of part of the functions of his office before the expiration of the term for which he was elected, and conferring upon city officials elected for another purpose such divested functions, does not invalidate the act as an attempted interference with the right of local self-government.—Attorney General v. Cogshall, 107 Mich. 181.

¶ 379. The Detroit Water Board Act as amended (Local Acts 1897, No. 477, § 28), conferring upon a board of commissioners the power to lay pipe and impose an assessment upon abutting property, and requiring the council to make assessments in conformity to the report of such board, is unconstitutional on the ground of conferring power upon a board consisting of members previously appointed, at a time when its powers were less, and who were not selected with a view to the exercise of such powers.—Cook Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 426.

¶ 380. Const., art. 10, § 7, providing that a city shall have such representatives in the board of supervisors as the legislature may direct, does not authorize the legislature to appoint such supervisors, and it is unconstitutional to provide, as in Local Acts 1901, No. 485, that the aldermen in certain specified wards shall be members of the board of supervisors and represent the city in lieu of certain city officers in addition to one supervisor for each ward as provided by pre-existing statute. There was no authority in the constituency of these particular wards to choose representatives for the city.—Attorney General ex rel. Penney v. Gramlich, 129 Mich. 630.

¶ 381. The legislature has not delegated to the City of Detroit power to fix the salary of the city counselor, whose appointment is provided for by Local Acts of 1893, No. 419, and the provision of said act fixing such salary is constitutional.—Speed v. Common Council of Detroit, 100 Mich. 92.

Legislative power as to duties of officers, see also ante § 76.
Delegation on other officers, see also post ¶ 425.

¶ 382. The common council of a city is a distinctive and inseparable feature in municipal government under our institutions, and cannot be done away with or stripped of its legislative powers.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 Mich. 108.

¶ 383. The provision in L. 1873, Act No. 392, § 12, "to establish a board of public works," whereby proposed public improvements must be referred to such board before the common council can carry them out, does not unduly limit the council's legislative authority.—Butler v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 552.

¶ 384. Whether it is competent for the legislature to confer upon boards created by it within cities the power to control the discretion of the common council as to the amount of moneys to be raised for local purposes, or to give them authority beyond that of mere agents or assistants of the council, quere.—People ex rel. Board of Water Com'rs v. East Saginaw Common Council, 33 Mich. 164.

§ 78. Police and fire departments.

¶ 385. The legislature may establish in a city a metropolitan police board, with power to estimate the police expenses, and compel the city authorities to raise by taxation the amount so estimated. Every city is represented in the state legislature; and it is for that body to determine how much power shall be conferred by the municipal charters which it grants.—People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

¶ 386. Laws of 1865, p. 99, creating the metropolitan police board of Detroit, confines the board's action to the city's limits, and the legislature cannot enlarge the powers of the board by an act not amendatory to the act of 1865, but which gives the board jurisdiction over townships adjacent to the city; the liquor law of 1887 (Laws 1887, Act No.

313, § 33), is therefore invalid in that its jurisdiction was thereby attempted to be extended to townships in Wayne county outside of Detroit.—Detroit Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne County Auditors, 68 Mich. 576.

¶ 387. Whether the legislature can create police districts not conforming to any municipal subdivision of the state, quære.—Detroit Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne County Auditors, 68 Mich. 576.

¶ 388. Public Acts of 1915, No. 81, providing that in all cities having full-paid members of fire departments, all officers and men receiving such full pay shall be entitled without any deduction of pay to a leave of absence of one day of twenty-four hours in every four days and a furlough of twenty days once in each year, is unconstitutional as constituting special legislation and as interfering with the rights of local self-government in violation of the Constitution, Art. VIII.—Simpson v. Paddock, 195 Mich. 581.

§ 79. Liquor traffic and other trade regulations.

Delegation of power, see post § 90.

¶ 389. Where a tax is to be levied on the liquor traffic for the double purpose of revenue and regulation, the moneys to be paid into the treasuries of the municipalities, the municipalities have no constitutional right to decide for themselves whether the tax shall be levied, or to have it controlled by their own officers. The general police of the state is fully under state control, and the municipalities cannot be allowed to decide for themselves whether a law of police shall or shall not be enforced in the locality.—Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406.

¶ 390. How. St., § 2283a1, which suspends the general law of the state relating to the taxation and regulation of the liquor traffic in such counties as have prohibited it under the provisions of the local option law, is constitutional.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 391. Public Acts 1913, Act No. 257, regulating the operation and construction of theaters and moving picture shows and providing for inspection by the state fire marshal and the issuance of a license, is not in conflict with the constitutional requirement for local self-government.—Jeup v. State Fire Marshal, 182 Mich. 231.

§ 80. Acquisition and control of parks.

Giving park commissioners power over streets, see post § 81.

Delegation of power to council, see post § 88.

¶ 392. The City of Detroit has the right to decide for itself upon the purchase of a public park.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 393. So much of the amendatory park act (Laws 1873, Act No. 214) as tends in any way to invest the park commissioners of Detroit with the entire and independent power of locating the park, contracting for the lands, creating the debt, etc., without consulting the common council, a citizens' meeting, or any other authority, held unconstitutional and void. The act is to be construed as if such provisions had never been inserted, and so construed it does not affect the provisions of the original act (Laws 1871, Act No. 277) requiring approval of both the common council and a citizens' meeting before the debt could be incurred or the bonds issued for the purchase of the proposed park.—People ex rel. Board of Park Com'rs v. City of Detroit, 29 Mich. 343.

¶ 394. It was held to be within the power of the legislature to take away from a "citizens' meeting," in which it had rested, the right to decide for the city upon the purchase of a public park (Laws 1873, Act No. 224), and to lodge this right with some other proper agent or representative of the local community. But the state could not confer the right upon its own agents, nor, by legislative amendment enlarging their powers, upon the park commissioners, who were originally state appointees, and became representatives of the city only in so far as their authority was recognized under the original statute by the representatives of the city, which recognition conferred upon them no such power. Whether this power could be vested in any other representative of the city than the common council, quære.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

§ 81. Control or use of streets and public places.

¶ 395. Under our constitution with its policy of local self-government municipalities have not power, unless authorized by statute, to grant to street railway companies exclusive privileges to occupy streets for railway purposes.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 110 Mich. 384; affirmed in 171 U. S. 48, 43 L. ed. 67, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732.

¶ 396. The legislature may authorize the laying of drains in highways by other officers than those having the highways in charge.—Kiley v. Bond, 114 Mich. 447.

¶ 397. The provisions of the constitution, art. 15, § 13, that the legislature shall provide for the incorporation and organization of cities and villages and shall restrict their powers of taxation, borrowing money, contracting debts and lending their credit, and art. 4, § 38, providing that the legislature may confer upon incorporated cities such power of local legislative and administrative character as they may deem proper, and art. 4, § 23, providing that the legislature shall not vacate or alter any street in a city, are merely restrictions upon the manner in which the legislature shall confer powers on municipalities, when it shall see fit to do so and do not in themselves create any power in the cities.—City of Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co., 56 Fed. 867.

¶ 398. Where a federal statute authorizing the erection by a city of a bridge over navigable waters provides that the care, control and use of the bridge shall be governed by ordinances of the city enacted as though said bridge were a public street, etc., so much of a state statute as undertakes to confer upon city park commissioners the legislative power of regulation is invalid where, under its charter, the powers of local government are divided into two departments, legislative and administrative, the park commissioners being restricted to the exercise of administrative powers.—Commissioners of Parks v. Common Council of Detroit, 80 Mich. 663.

¶ 399. That portion of section 9 of the Motor Vehicle Law, Act No. 318, Pub. Acts 1909, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2495, which attempts to take from cities and villages the reasonable control of their streets and public places violates section 28 of Article VIII of the constitution of 1909.—People v. McGraw, 184 Mich. 233.

§ 82. Public works and improvements generally.

Interference with township officers, see ante § 73.
Delegations of power, see post § 89.

¶ 400. The principles of local self-government are not infringed by leaving it to a state officer to supervise the appropriation of state lands to a local improvement.—Sparrow v. State Land Office Com'r, 56 Mich. 567.

¶ 401. A statute leaving to the probate judge of a certain county the appointment of a commissioner to superintend the work of improving a river in that and in another county, and to determine the necessity for such work, and assess taxation for benefits upon lands in the two counties, creating also a board for final review of assessments, most of whose members are supervisors of townships in the first county, is void as an encroachment upon the right of local selfgovernment.—Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 23.

¶ 402. The legislature has power, provided the board of supervisors consents, and subject to the limitations imposed by the federal constitution and laws, to authorize a township to construct a bridge across a navigable stream extending, in part, beyond the township's limits.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

§ 83. Highway improvements.

Delegation of power by legislature, see post § 89.
Bridge improvements, see ante § 82.
Interference with township officers, see also ante § 73.
Highway officers as local or general officers, see also ante § 74.
Evasion of township control by declaring road a state road, see also post ¶ 529.

¶ 403. Public Acts 1915, No. 59, relating to the construction and improvement of highways, levying of assessments therefor on adjacent landowners, and giving the execution or the administration of the law to the state highway commissioner where counties retain the township road system, is not invalid as constituting an invasion of the alleged township right of self-government, as the improvement of highways is a public as well as a local concern, under the Constitution, Art. VIII, § 26, and the state necessarily has the right to designate a proper agent to carry out the work.—Loomis v. Rogers, 197 Mich. 265.

§ 84. Drainage and sewerage.

Drainage officers as general officers, see ante § 74.
Delegation of powers, see post § 86.
General police power of the state over sewerage disposal, see also post § 101.

¶ 404. Public Acts 1911, No. 185, Ch. VII, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 3429, 3431, 3435, relating to the joint action of county drains commissioners on drains in or affecting more than one county, and providing that the drain commissioners jointly shall agree upon the per cent of benefits to be paid by each county on the construction of any drain, and that after such agreement each commissioner shall thereafter assess the individual parcels of land and townships at large in his own county, but in case they are unable to agree an appeal shall be taken to the state highway commissioner, whose decision shall be final, is not unconstitutional as invading the right of local self-government, as the matter is one of public and not of local interest.—Cilley v. Sullivan, 187 Mich. 447.

D. DELEGATION OF POWER.

§ 85. In general.

Powers constitutionally reposed in local divisions, see ante, II, C.

Making operation of laws to depend on a contingency or on local vote, see post § 95.
Conferring functions of office on private persons, see post § 263.
What amounts to a delegation, see also post §§ 86-91.
Particular instances, see post §§ 86-91.
Powers delegable to townships, see Const. Art. VIII, § 17.

¶ 405. There are many things that a legislature can do which it cannot delegate to any other body.—Wellman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 83 Mich. 592, affirmed in 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400.

¶ 406. Where the constitution vests authority in the legislature it in legal effect prohibits the exercise of such powers by any other bodies.—People ex rel. Bolt v. Riordan, 73 Mich. 508.

¶ 407. If the legislature were to attempt to delegate a purely legislative power to a commission, it would be unconstitutional.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355.

¶ 408. The power of enacting general laws cannot be delegated by the legislature. even to the people.—People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343.

§ 86. Particular subjects and instances of delegation.

Of power to make internal improvements, see post § 282.
Of power to borrow money without approval of voters, see also post ¶ 1182.
Imposing limitations on actions and leaving determination of period to courts, see also post ¶ 1021.

¶ 409. To declare what shall constitute a crime, and how it shall be punished, is an exercise of the sovereign power of the state, inherent in the legislative department of the government, and, unless authorized by the constitution, this power cannot be delegated to any other body or agency.—People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611.

¶ 410. Laws 1881, Act No. 150 (How. St., § 978), exempting from jury duty contributing members enrolled in state troops, is not open to the objection that it transfers from the legislature to military officers the power to determine exemptions from jury duty.—Hall v. Burlingame, 88 Mich. 438.

¶ 411. Laws 1893, Act No. 207, authorizing courts, justices of the peace and police justices to permit persons complained of as disorderly on account of drunkenness to give a special recognizance conditioned upon their taking the cure for such drunkenness, and for the adjournment of such case against such person for a limited time for this purpose, and providing for the acquittal and discharge of such person upon a showing by him that he has conformed to the conditions of his recognizance up to that time, and that in case of his violating such conditions the trial shall proceed as if no recognizance had been given, and for the forfeiture of the recognizance if the person recognized shall fail to appear according to its conditions, is unconstitutional; it not being within the province of the legislature to delegate to private corporations the power to make laws for the discharge of offenders.—Senate of Happy Home Clubs v. Alpena County Sup'rs, 99 Mich. 117.

¶ 412. The provision of Laws 1889, Act No. 111, which authorizes the state board of fish commissioners to give permits to any person to catch or take fish from the waters, at such time and in such manner as the commission may direct, for the purpose of propagation, does not confer upon the commission legislative power, but is an exception from the enacting clause, excepting the taking of fish for the purpose of propagation under such restrictions as it is entirely competent for the legislature to prescribe.—People v. Brooks, 101 Mich. 98.

¶ 413. Laws 1885, Act No. 230, as amended by Laws 1893, Act No. 47, which provides for the prevention of the introduction and spread of cholera and other dangerous communicable diseases, and makes it unlawful for any person to refuse to permit his baggage and personal effects to be disinfected in accordance with the rules and regulations of the state board of health made and established in pursuance of said act, does not delegate to such board legislative power such as to contravene Const., art. 4, § 1, vesting the legislative power in a senate and house of representatives.—Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238.

¶ 414. Public Acts 1903, No. 237, § 14, conferring detailed and extensive powers over the acts of the drain commissioner and his employees and the making of drainage contracts, is not invalid as a delegation to the supervisors of power to amend the drainage laws of the state; since all such matters are of local administrative character, which under Const., art. 4, § 38, the legislature is authorized to confer on local governing officers.—Albert v. Gibson, 141 Mich. 698.

¶ 415. The Michigan Standard Policy Law (Pub. Acts 1881, No. 149), is invalid as contrary to Const., art. IV, § 1, which provides that "the legislative power is vested in the senate and house of representatives," since, by giving the commissioner of insurance power to fix the time when the use of the form of policy adopted or amended by the insurance commission "shall become obligatory," it undertakes to delegate legislative power to such commission.—King v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 416. The Michigan Railroad Commission, by Pub. Acts 1907, No. 312, is given the power to establish maximum rates, the railroads being entitled to a hearing and the rulings of the commission being subject to review by the courts. Held, the commission's duties are not legislative but administrative, and the act does not violate section 2, art. 4 of the Constitution of Michigan, by delegating to the commission legislative powers.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355.

¶ 417. The Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of domestic and foreign investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, is not open to the objection that it delegates legislative or judicial power because it creates an administrative board supervising business affected with a public interest.—Alabama N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

§ 87. ——Taxing power.

¶ 418. The legislature has the power to impose specific taxes upon a street railway company according to its circumstances and this power may be delegated to and is delegated to almost every municipality.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Common Council of Detroit, 125 Mich. 673.

¶ 419. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 231, § 14, giving to the companies organized under Pub. Acts 1883, No. 39, of which it is amendatory, the privilege of electing each year whether they will pay a specific tax or be subject to the usual ad valorem taxation, is not a delegation of legislative power to a private corporation, and is therefore constitutional.—Attorney General ex rel. Beadle v. Arnott, 145 Mich. 416.

¶ 420. There was no abandonment of the legislative function by the legislature in the enactment of Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1933 et seq.), providing that the board of state tax commissioners shall constitute a state board of assessors, who are to assess the railroad and certain other corporate property in the state, and prescribing as the rate of taxation, the average rate of taxation levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; affirming 138 Fed. 223.

§ 88. ——Formation and government of local divisions.

Attempted alteration of existing local powers by delegation to other officers, see post XII.

¶ 421. The power to annex territory to municipal corporations may be delegated to boards of supervisors of other public bodies.—Oakman v. Wayne County Board Sup'rs, 185 Mich. 359. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 422. The general act, Laws 1873, Act No. 179, for the incorporation of villages was held unconstitutional for the reason that it, in effect, delegated to private citizens the legislative function of fixing boundaries and compelling the incorporation of separate villages and intervening farm lands, against consent and without any opportunity for hearing; the legislature cannot abdicate its functions or subject citizens and their interests to the interference of any but lawful public agencies.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 423. Local Acts 1905, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit, by providing in section 9 that the foregoing provisions shall not become operative until the proposition shall have been approved by a majority of the electors residing in the proposed annexed territory at an election for that purpose is not unconstitutional as an unlawful delegation of legislative power.—Attorney General ex rel. Battishill v. Township Board of Springwells, 143 Mich. 523.

¶ 424. The legislature has ample power to fix the salaries of public officers, and, unless restrained by the constitution, to change them at any time, even during the official term, and it can delegate this power to municipal councils.—Wyandotte v. Drennan, 46 Mich. 478.

¶ 425. A charter provision (Local Acts 1895, No. 366) empowering the board of estimates of a city to disallow items included in the annual budget as approved by the common council is not void as a delegation of power which under Const., art. 4, § 38, can be conferred upon the common council alone.—Robinson v. City of Detroit, 107 Mich. 168.

¶ 426. The invalid delegation of legislative power by Local Acts 1890, No. 452, which provides for the amendment or repeal of the charter of the city of Detroit, at the instance of electors or the mayor, cannot be sustained under Const., art. 4, § 38, authorizing the legislature to determine what legislative and administrative powers, municipalities shall have, as the local act in question delegates legislative authority to another body than that named in the constitution, contrary to the principles of constitutional law.—Elliott v. City of Detroit, 121 Mich. 611.

¶ 427. Local Acts 1899, No. 452, providing for the submission to electors of the city of Detroit, of amendments to the city charter, operates to transfer legislative power to the executive head of the municipality, or to electors who petition for amendment or repeal of the charter, and is void as an unqualified and unauthorized delegation of legislative power.—Elliott v. City of Detroit, 121 Mich. 611.

¶ 428. The legislature's power to increase the representation of a city upon the county board of supervisors cannot be delegated to the city, and Local Acts of 1887, No. 415, in so far as it attempts to confer upon the city council of Muskegon discretionary power to increase its representation upon the board of supervisors conflicts with Const., art. 10, §§ 6, 7, providing for such board and for the legislature to fix the representation of cities on it.—People ex rel. Bolt v. Riordan, 73 Mich. 508.

¶ 429. Const., art. 4, § 1, providing that "the legislative power is vested in a senate and house of representatives" cannot be construed to prohibit the legislature from conferring upon the common council of Detroit the power to appoint a park commissioner.—Attorney General ex rel. Maybury v. Bolger, 128 Mich. 355.

¶ 430. Provisions of a city charter which seek to create municipal grievances out of violations of a state law are invalid; so, if they attempt to supersede the constitutional functions of the prosecuting attorney in the management of the prosecution of crime, or to lodge the issuing of warrants of arrest in the hands of clerks of municipal courts.—People ex rel. Robinson v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529; People v. Colleton, 59 Mich. 573.

¶ 431. The legislature has the constitutional power to confer upon the common council of a city authority to prohibit, prevent and suppress the keeping and leasing of houses of ill-fame, and to restrain, suppress and punish the keepers thereof, and the owners and lessors of such premises.—People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611; St. Ignace v. Snyder, 75 Mich. 649.

§ 89. ——Road and bridge affairs.

¶ 432. The power conferred by Local Acts of 1893, No. 415, upon the Detroit board of commissioners of parks and boulevards to order the construction of sidewalks by adjacent land owners, and to determine where and of what material such walks shall be constructed, is not such a legislative power as, under the constitution, can be conferred only upon the common council.—Turner v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 326.

(1 Mich. Dig. 66)

¶ 433. Local Acts 1901, No. 417, § 33, authorizing the commissioner of parks and boulevards of the city of Detroit to set apart a portion of a boulevard for a speedway is constitutional and not in contravention of the uses of a public boulevard.—Scovel v. City of Detroit, 146 Mich. 93.

§ 90. ——Liquor laws and regulations.

See also ante ¶ 411, post ¶¶ 513, 514.

¶ 434. Subd. 7, § 2769, Comp. Laws 1897, granting villages power to suppress saloons, is constitutional and ordinances passed in pursuance thereof are valid.—Fuchs v. Common Council Village of Grass Lake, 166 Mich. 569.

¶ 435. By Comp. Laws 1897, § 2769, the legislature delegated power to villages, to be exercised by local legislation of the common council, to pass all laws and ordinances relating to municipal concerns, which includes the power to suppress the liquor traffic, and this is not in conflict with either the constitution or general laws of this state.—Vernier v. Village Council of Grosse Pointe Shores, 170 Mich. 656.

§ 91. ——Local option laws.

¶ 436. The prohibitory liquor law of 1853 provided for its submission to a vote of the electors of the state, to be taken in June of that year. If approved by a majority, the law was to take effect on the 1st of December following; but if not, it was to become a law from and after the 1st day of March, 1870. A majority of the vote cast was in favor of its adoption. Whether this submission of the question to the people was to be regarded as a delegation of legislative power, and the law inoperative in consequence, quære.—People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343.

¶ 437. Under Const., art. 4, § 38, empowering the legislature to confer powers of a local, legislative and administrative character upon boards of supervisors, etc., the legislature has authority to prescribe the conditions on which the power thus delegated may be exercised, and How. St., § 2882b2, which provides that such boards, after adopting a resolution of prohibition, shall not repeal the same in less than two years, is not an unreasonable restraint and is not void as a delegation of the power to pass irrepealable legislation.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 438. The legislature, in conferring upon the board of supervisors the authority to order the prohibition within the county of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, had the constitutional right to prescribe as a condition to its exercise that the majority of the legal electors should first vote in favor of such prohibition.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 439. Under Const., art. 4, § 38, it is competent for the legislature to confer upon boards of supervisors power to determine whether the facts exist prerequisite to the authorizing of a special election to determine the question of local option; accordingly Laws 1889, Act No. 207, is valid.—Friesner v. Common Council of City of Charlotte, 91 Mich. 504.

¶ 440. Whether the action of the board of supervisors, under the local option law in ordering prohibition in the county, is regarded as an exercise of legislative or of administrative power, makes no difference with the constitutionality of the law, such action being authorized by the authority of the legislature under the constitution.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 441. Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, simply authorized the board of supervisors to submit the question of local option to vote upon the filing of a proper petition. Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, amending the Act of 1889, went further, and commanded the board to submit such question upon demand of the voters. Held, the act was not unconstitutional as giving legislative powers to the electors.—In re Wilson, 100 Mich. 42.

III. GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS AND POWERS; POLICE POWER.

§ 92. Legislative powers in general.

General power of the legislature in respect to the other departments of the government, see ante II, A, B.

Power as to matters of local government, see ante II, C.

Delegations of power, see ante II, D.

General power as to submission of constitutional amendments, see ante §§ 4, 5.

Power of legislature to pass inexpedient or unwise laws, see also ante § 21.

Police power, its limits and nature, and the objects of its exercise, see post § 97 et seq.

Legislative power over procedure, see post § 187.

Powers relating to crimes and criminal procedure, see post IX.

Power to make legislation retroactive, see post XI.

Power over elections and suffrage, see post XII.

Legislative power over or respecting offices and officers, see post XII.

Legislative audits, see post § 280.

Respecting corporations, see post § 289.

Respecting exemptions and homesteads, see post § 290.

Power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain.

General powers of the State of Michigan, see State of Michigan.

Powers and limitations of the Territory of Michigan and of the Northwest Territory under the Ordinance of 1787, see State of Michigan; and see also Public Lands; Taxes, I, II, A.

[Note. The power of the state, being plenary except as limited by the constitutions, extends to all matters within the scope of legislation. Statutes are attacked usually on the ground that they violate some specific provision, and cases of that kind are treated post V-XVIII. This division, III, is confined to general pronouncements, largely dicta, on the police power and the general scope of legislation.]

General provisions for organization and procedure of the legislature, see Const., art. V.

Inhibitions on legislative divorces, lottery laws and establishment of state paper, see Const., art. V, §§ 32, 33, 35.

¶ 442. The legislative power of the people through their agent, the legislature, is limited only by the constitution, which is not a grant of power, but a limitation on its exercise.—Attorney General v. Preston, 56 Mich. 177.

¶ 443. Legislative power is limited only by the national and state constitutions, and though the legislature can confer local legislative powers upon a board of supervisors, it can also suspend their exercise or revoke them entirely, even in the matter of laying off new townships from the territory of old ones. And this may result from a necessary inconsistency between the action of the legislature and that of the board.—Attorney General v. Marr, 55 Mich. 445.

¶ 444. If there is no express denial, or denial by necessary implication from other limitations contained in the constitution upon legislative power, the power exists, and may be exercised at the pleasure of the legislature.—Taggart, Attorney General ex rel. Mason v. Perkins, 73 Mich. 303.

¶ 445. The legislature has power to grant an exclusive franchise to maintain a plank road on a public highway.—Detroit & B. P. R. Co. v. Detroit Suburban R. Co., 103 Mich. 585.

§ 93. Power to bind successors.

Reasonableness of rates fixed for public service as question left to courts, see ante §§ 44, 50.

¶ 446. A legislature cannot bind its successors where the elements of contract, concession and consideration do not appear.—

City of Detroit v. Detroit & Howell Plank Road Co., 43 Mich. 140.

§ 94. Power to define terms and establish facts.

See also post ¶ 499.

¶ 447. The legislature can make its own definitions for statutory purposes, but cannot thereby change a constitutional definition.—Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265.

§ 95. Contingent or optional legislation.

Nondelegability of law-making power, see ante § 85.

Local option laws as a delegation of power, see ante § 91.

¶ 448. Whether the prohibitory liquor-law of Feb. 12, 1853 (which provided that the time of its taking effect should depend on its ratification by popular vote), involved a delegation of legislative power and was therefore invalid, quære.—People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343.

¶ 449. It is competent for the legislature to provide that a law shall go into effect upon happening of a contingency.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 450. The legislature may enact a valid law to take effect upon the happening of any future event, certain or contingent, which does not involve the exercise by others of that legislative will and discretion, which cannot be constitutionally delegated; therefore the enactment of Pub. Laws 1905, No. 272, designating that two terms of the circuit court shall be held at Battle Creek, provided the common council thereof shall furnish a suitable place for holding court there is valid, and there is no delegation of the legislative power of the state to the common council of Battle Creek.—McCall v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 319.

§ 96. Regulation of public service and rates.

Relative powers of legislature and courts, see ante §§ 44, 50.

Delegation of power to Railroad Commission, see ante § 86.

Due process in laws and regulations, see post §§ 159, 160.

¶ 451. The legislature has power to regulate tolls or rates of fare to be charged by corporations which have devoted their property to a public use.—Stimson v. Muskegon Booming Co., 100 Mich. 347.

¶ 452. As the maximum rates actually fixed by the legislature for carrying passengers on railroads must, prima facie, be presumed to be reasonable, a statute reducing the rate where 1,000-mile tickets are purchased cannot be upheld on the ground that the legislature would have power to reduce the maximum rate for all persons to the rate fixed by such statute.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; reversing 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 453. The fact that a railroad company has voluntarily sold 1,000-mile tickets good for a year from the time of their sale, does not authorize the legislature to compel the company so to do, or furnish a standard by which to measure the reasonableness of a statute requiring the company to sell 1,000-mile tickets good for two years and running to the purchaser, his wife and children.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, reversing 114 Mich. 460.

§ 97. Police power in general.

Extent or limits of the power, see post § 98.

Other powers distinguished, see post § 99.

Particular objects and subjects see post § 100 et seq.

Presumption as to reasonableness of police regulation, see ante § 24.

Subjection to the federal power, see post § 122.

Exercise of police power impairing contract rights and obligations, see post § 175.

General police powers of cities and villages under their charters, see Municipal Corporations, IX.

¶ 454. The police power is a general term used to express the particular right of a government which is inherent in every sovereignty. It must, however, be exercised by the state in subordination to the provisions of the federal constitution.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; reversing 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 455. The police power of a state is said to be a power or organization of a system of regulations tending to the health, order, convenience and comfort of the people, and to the prevention and punishment of injuries and offenses to the public.—People v. Brazee, 183 Mich. 259, affirmed in 241 U. S. 340, 60 L. ed. 1034, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

¶ 456. The police power includes the right to enact such legislation as is deemed essential for the protection of the public peace, good order, morals, safety and health.—Locke v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 535.

§ 98. ——Extent of power; regulation or destruction.

Right to destroy diseased cattle under police power, see Animals, § 21.

¶ 457. In the exercise of its police powers a state may prohibit, under penalties, the exercise of any trade or employment which is found to be hazardous or injurious to its citizens, without providing compensation to those upon whom the prohibition operates.—People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244.

¶ 458. The police power of the state is not omnipotent; it cannot, under guise of regulation, destroy property rights arbitrarily and without reason.—City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94.

¶ 459. Whether the legislature has the power to prohibit wholly the manufacture and use of oleomargarine, quære.—Northwestern Mfg. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 381.

¶ 460. As to a business concededly subject to regulation the legislature, under the police power, has the right to locally prohibit and so destroy, without compensation, a business built up and carried on for years without previous similar restriction.—Whitney v. Township Board of Township of Grand Rapids, 71 Mich. 234.

¶ 461. The constitutional right of the citizen to use his property without regulation is plain, unless the public welfare requires that such use be regulated. But if the public welfare does require it, the private right must yield to the public exigency.—People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527.

¶ 462. The police power of the state over railroads includes all those regulations which are necessary for the safety and protection of persons and property in transit over them, or crossing them upon the public highways.—People v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 471.

¶ 463. The legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, for the protection of game and fish, prohibit the sale of the same, though lawfully acquired, and though an article of food not deleterious in itself.—People v. O'Neil, 110 Mich. 324.

§ 99. ——Relation to and distinction from taxing and other powers.

Taxes distinguished from licenses, see Licenses; Taxes, I.

¶ 464. The police power may be combined with the taxing power in the same statute.—Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.

¶ 465. The enactment of a statute taxing the liquor traffic does not prevent the state, in the exercise of its sovereign powers of taxation and police, from passing further laws affecting the traffic.—Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.

¶ 466. The enactment of a liquor-tax law does not estop the state from empowering municipal councils to further regulate the local sale of liquor by requiring saloon keepers to take out licenses.—Wolf v. City of Lansing, 53 Mich. 367.

¶ 467. Local assessments for the improvement of streets are made in the exercise of the power of taxation, and cannot be justified as an exercise of police power, as under the latter power such improvements cannot be compelled.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495, 523.

¶ 468. A license is issued under the police power of the state, and if the fee required therefor is intended for revenue, its exaction is an exercise of the power of taxation.—Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157.

¶ 469. Under the police power a business may be taxed with a view of discouragement.—Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406.

¶ 470. The fact that revenue is incidentally derived does not operate to change an enactment from an exercise of the police power to that of the taxing power, where it is not so disproportionate as to make the fee charged unreasonable.—Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157.

¶ 471. Police power is regulative and restrictive only, limiting and dictating the owner's use of property for public safety, but never extends to depriving him of it for public benefit.—Allen v. City of Detroit, 167 Mich. 464; Frumveller v. Post, Id.

¶ 472. A statute taxing dogs and appropriating the resulting fund to the payment of damage done by dogs to sheep is valid, being a police regulation and not a tax law void for want of uniformity.—Van Horn v. People, 46 Mich. 183; Hendrie v. Kalthoff, 48 Mich. 306.

¶ 473. Laws 1877, Act No. 198, How. St. § 2123, imposing a tax on dogs, is not strictly a tax law, but is an exercise of the police power of the state, being in the nature of a license imposed on those who keep animals requiring special police regulations, to prevent mischief, and to provide a special fund to repair losses from their depredations.—Van Horn v. People, 46 Mich. 183; Hendrie v. Kalthoff, 48 Mich. 306.

§ 100. Particular subjects and objects of police power.

Due process in various regulations, see post §§ 156-169.

Fish regulations, see also ante ¶ 412.
Power to prohibit sale of fish or game, see also ante ¶ 463.
Fish and game laws as class legislation, see post § 220.
Regulation by city of building construction and reconstruction within fire limits, see Buildings, § 2.

¶ 474. The police power extends to the protection of the lives, health and morality of citizens, and to the preservation of good order and public morals.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6; Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 475. The police power of a state is not confined to regulations looking to the preservation of life, health, good order and decency. Laws providing for protection against and prevention of imposition or fraud are as a general rule free from constitutional objection.—People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594.

¶ 476. An ordinance requiring all persons owning or occupying any real estate in a city to keep and maintain good and sufficient sidewalks along all streets and avenues in front of or adjacent to such real estate, and imposing a fine or imprisonment for a failure so to do, is unconstitutional and void, as is a charter provision authorizing such an ordinance; an indigent person could not comply with such provisions.—City of Port Huron v. Jenkinson, 77 Mich. 414.

¶ 477. The legislature has no power to authorize a municipality to make that a purpresture or nuisance which is not so in fact, if by so doing the constitutional rights of any citizen in his person or property are infringed or destroyed.—City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94.

¶ 478. For the protection of the fish and to preserve equality in the right to fish, the state has power to regulate the manner in which they shall be caught and to protect their migrations.—People v. Collison, 85 Mich. 105.

¶ 479. The legislature has power to regulate the taking of fish and game within the confines of the state, and the waters that it owns, not only as to time and place, but as to method.—People v. Setunsky, 161 Mich. 624.

¶ 480. A city cannot, under the police power, prohibit a riparian owner on an inland lake from bathing in the waters of the lake though the city is also a riparian owner thereon and draws its water supply from the lake.—People v. Hulbert, 131 Mich. 156.

¶ 481. Laws 1889, Act 214 (How. St., § 2132b), providing for the payment by township and city treasurers to the county treasurer of the dog-tax collected by them to be kept as a special fund for the payment of losses suffered from the killing or wounding of sheep is a valid exercise of the police power.—Longyear v. Buck, 83 Mich. 236.

¶ 482. The provision of How. St., § 799, declaring the award by fence-viewers a lien on the land where the fence was built or repaired, and providing that such award may be collected as a tax, is a legitimate exercise of the police power inherent in the state.—Gilson v. Munson, 114 Mich. 671.

¶ 483. Pub. Acts 1915, No. 302, § 29, providing that the owner of a motor vehicle shall be liable for any injury occasioned by the negligent operation of such motor vehicle when it is being driven by another with his express or implied consent or knowledge, while safeguarding the rights of persons having occasion to use the streets, does not unreasonably infringe upon the rights of those able to own automobiles, and is within the police power of the state.—Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co., 198 Mich. 170.

¶ 484. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 109, § 14, forbidding contributions to nomination and election expenses by corporations is a valid exercise of the police power as tending to aid in the purity of elections.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

§ 101. Food and health regulations.

Class laws and basis for classification, see post X.

¶ 485. The preservation of the public health is a matter peculiarly within the police power of the state.—Locke v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 535.

¶ 486. Danger to the public health is a sufficient ground for the exercise of the police power by the legislature, or the courts on matters reasonably essential to guard against such danger.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 487. As the care of the public health is a police power, and is a matter of general concern in the exercise of which no right of local self-government is involved, a statute establishing a board of health for a city and vesting in the governor the appointment of the members thereof is valid.—Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 488. Act No. 98, Public Acts 1913, conferring on the State Board of Health control over water works and sewage disposal systems, etc., is a valid exercise of the police power.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 489. The imposition by a village by-law of a license of $10 per month for the privilege of selling fresh meat in the village streets cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power for the benefit of public health or the preservation of good order.—Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527.

¶ 490. It is competent for the legislature, under the police power, to provide for the protection of the public health by making it an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment to sell adulterated food or drink, irrespective of the seller's knowledge of the adulteration.—People v. Snowberger, 113 Mich. 86.

¶ 491. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 22, which prohibits the coloring of oleomargarine to resemble butter, is within the police power of the state.—People v. Rotter, 131 Mich. 250.

¶ 492. The legislature, in the exercise of its police power, may pass an act fixing the standard of sausage and prohibiting the sale of sausage which does not comply with such standard, under penalty.—People v. Dehn, 190 Mich. 122.

§ 102. Regulating practice of medicine and dentistry.

Advertising by physicians for venereal diseases, see post § 103.
Due process in regulations, see post § 161.
Abridgment of privileges and immunities of citizens, see post § 229.

¶ 493. The regulation of the practice of medicine and dentistry is within the police power of the state.—People v. Blair, 192 Mich. 183.

¶ 494. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, providing for the examination, regulation, licensing and registration of physicians and surgeons is not unconstitutional as an interference with the right of a citizen to employ whom he chooses as it is clearly within the police power of the state to provide ample qualifications to safeguard the public interest.—People v. Reetz, 127 Mich. 87; affirmed in 185 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

¶ 495. A state has power to make reasonable provisions for determining the qualifications of those engaging in the practice of medicine, and punishing those who attempt to engage therein, in defiance of such statutory provisions.—Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

¶ 496. The regulation of those claiming special skill or knowledge in the healing art, and who seek for gain to engage in the practice thereof, is within the police power of the state.—Locke v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 535.

¶ 497. The fact that a statute (Laws 1885, Act. No. 134 §§ 6 and 7; How. St., §2287cl. 2287c5,) allows a board discretion to fix a fee for a required certificate (e. g., for the practice of pharmacy), not to exceed a named sum, does not render the act open to the objection that it gives the board power to fix fees arbitrarily and to discriminate between individuals.—People v. Moorman, 86 Mich. 433.

§ 103. Regulating advertising.

¶ 498. Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 62, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5299, prohibiting the advertising of treating venereal diseases and sexual ailments, is valid as a reasonable police regulation.—People v. Kennedy, 176 Mich. 384.

¶ 499. It is within the police power of the legislature to prohibit advertisements which are deceptive and misleading, although it would be a question of fact in any given case whether the representation of fact in the advertisement was untrue, deceptive or misleading.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 192 Mich. 139.

§ 104. Safety and welfare of workmen.

Health regulations, see ante § 101.
Due process in liability laws, see post § 156.
Class legislation, see post § 218.

¶ 500. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 111; How. St., § 1690z3, requiring emery wheels that are in continuous use to be provided with blowers to carry away the dust arising from the operation of them, is a valid exercise of the police power. Whether it is invalid as applied to a person operating his own wheel, quære.—People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527.

¶ 501. The state, in the exercise of its police power, may prescribe reasonable regulations for the protection of employees, notwithstanding the latter, as between themselves and their employer, may have assumed the risk of the injuries sought to be averted.—People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527.

§ 105. Welfare and protection of women and children.

Provision for legislation as to labor by women and children, see Const., art. V, § 29.

¶ 502. It is no longer open to question that the legislature has power to determine by rules and definitions the class or classes of children requiring state wardship and to impose state supervision.—Hunt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 142 Mich. 93.

¶ 503. The legislature has undoubted power to legislate for the removal of children from bad environment and the imposition of restraint against evil, corresponding to the prerogative jurisdiction of chancery over infants and placing their welfare above the natural rights and control of their parents.—Hunt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 142 Mich. 93.

§ 106. Drainage.

Right of local government, see ante § 84.

¶ 504. Drainage for the purpose of private advantage, or for any other purpose than that of the public health, cannot be justified under the police power.—Kinnie v. Bare, 68 Mich. 625.

¶ 505. The diversion from a chain of lakes of water from a mill, without due process of law and without compensation, cannot be justified on the ground that it will result in the improvement of the highways and the reclaiming of marsh lands.—Stock v. Township of Jefferson, 114 Mich. 357.

§ 107. Trading and mercantile and marketing regulations.

Bulk Sales Law, see also post ¶ 702.

Bulk Sales Law as class legislation, see post § 217.

Trading Stamp Law as class legislation, see post § 217.

Trade regulations obnoxious to local self government, see ante § 79.

¶ 506. A municipal ordinance requiring peddlers of patented articles to obtain a license is merely such a regulation as may be adopted under the general police authority of the state.—People v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617.

¶ 507. Laws 1893, Act No. 148, prohibiting barbers from carrying on their business on Sunday, with an exception in favor of those who conscientiously believe in observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and refrain from secular business on that day, held within the police power of the state.—People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151.

¶ 508. The business of pawnbroker, junk dealer or dealer in second-hand goods and merchandise, comes expressly within the control of the police power of the state, and, while legitimate in the absence of any statute law controlling it, no inalienable right exists to carry it on without complying with those provisions and restrictions which the legislative power of the state has seen fit to require.—City of Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670.

¶ 509. The authority to establish and regulate markets falls within the police power of the state, and the right to exercise it may be conferred upon municipalities.—Petz v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 169.

¶ 510. How. St., § 9354j, providing that contracts limiting, controlling or regulating the production or quantity or market price of any article or commodity to be raised by mining, agricultural, etc., business, shall be void, is valid.—Bingham v. Brands, 119 Mich. 255.

§ 108. Liquor traffic regulations.

Delegation of power, see ante § 90.

Power to regulate and tax at the same time, see also ante § 99.

Due process of law in regulations, see post §§ 168, 169.

As laws impairing contracts, see post § 177.

Class legislation, see post § 221.

Privileges and immunities of citizens, see post § 231.

Operation of constitutional and statutory prohibitions in general, see Intoxicating Liquors, I, IV.

¶ 511. Laws 1875, Act No. 231, entitled "An act to prevent the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors, wine and beer to minors, and to drunken persons, and to habitual drunkards; to provide a remedy against persons selling liquor to husbands or children in certain cases," required all saloons to be closed on Sunday, and after eleven o'clock at night. Held valid.—Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 279.

¶ 512. It is a lawful exercise of the police power to prohibit women from entering saloons for the purpose of drinking, notwithstanding females are granted equal rights, privileges and immunities by the constitution.—People v. Case, 153 Mich. 98.

¶ 513. The legislature has police power to confer upon municipalities by subsequent legislation the right to deal with the liquor traffic in a manner not provided for in the general law.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193.

¶ 514. Under the police power of the state the legislature may confer upon municipalities the right to determine, when they license sale of intoxicating liquors, the places where saloons may be kept, and to determine that question upon each application.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193.

¶ 515. The prohibition of the manufacture and sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors is a valid exercise of the police power.—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

¶ 516. Section 5392, Comp. Laws 1897; How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5068, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor to students attending any public or private institution of learning, is a valid exercise of police power.—People v. Damm, 183 Mich. 554.

§ 109. Regulating employment agencies.

¶ 517. The regulation and control by the state of private employment agencies (Act No. 301, Public Acts 1913) is a valid exercise of the police power.—People v. Brazee, 183 Mich. 259; affirmed in 241 U. S. 340, 60 L. ed. 1034, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

¶ 518. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 301, providing for the licensing, bonding and regulation of private employment agencies, the limiting of the amount of fee to be charged by such agencies, the refunding of such fees in certain cases, the imposing of obligations on persons, firms, or corporations which have induced workmen to travel in the hope of securing employment, charging the commissioner of labor with the enforcement of the act and empowering him to make rules and regulations and fixing penalties for the violation of the act is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, the general nature of the business being such that, unless regulated, many persons may be exposed to misfortunes against which the legislature can properly protect them.—Brazee v. Michigan, 241 U. S. 340, 60 L. ed. 1034, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; affirming 183 Mich. 259.

§ 110. Blue Sky Law.

Delegation of power to commission, see ante ¶ 417.

Blue Sky Law as denying due process, see post § 164.

As deprivation of liberty to buy and sell, see post ¶ 594.

¶ 519. The Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 46 (Comp. Laws 1915, § 11945 et seq.), providing for the regulation of the sale and disposition of bonds, stocks or other securities within the state by the Michigan Securities Commission and the issuance of licenses, is within the police power of the state in the prevention of fraud, even though expense and inconvenience may be caused by its enforcement.—Merrick v. N. W. Halsey Co., 242 U. S. 568, 61 L. ed. 498, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227; reversing 228 Fed. 805.

¶ 520. The provision in the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of domestic and foreign investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, that no investment company shall offer to sell any of its securities until more than 30 days after it has filed with the commission full data regarding itself and its securities, is beyond the police power of the state, since it makes no distinction as to character and quality of the securities, and would prohibit the sale, during the 30-day period, of good securities offered by solvent and reliable concerns.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

¶ 521. It is not within the police power of the state to decide for its citizens the financial advisability of their investments, so long as the investors are not deceived or misled.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

¶ 522. The provision in the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of domestic and foreign investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, that if the commission finds that the sale of the securities will "in all probability result in loss to the purchasers" the sale is prohibited, is not within the police power of the state, since the element of fraud is eliminated, and the commission would have no power to authorize a sale if the security was not worth the price asked, even though the property was sold to a careful purchaser who was not misled and was willing to buy.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

Relative power of states and the nation, see post IV.

Scope and operation on the state police power, see post § 122.

Supersession of state laws, see post § 123.

Fourteenth Amendment as state limitation, see post ¶ 580.

Retroactive legislation, see post § 234.

Power of United States to acquire needed lands in state, see United States.

¶ 523. The act making treasury notes a legal tender in payment of private debts was within the legitimate powers of congress, and is valid.—Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 303.

IV. GUARANTIES AND LIMITATIONS IN GENERAL; STATE AND FEDERAL.

§ 112. Construction and operation in general.

Construction of the constitution, see generally ante §§ 6-15.

Construction of the state constitution as limitation rather than as a grant of power, see ante § 92.

Effect of the XIVth Federal Amendment, see post § 134.

Presumption against legislative intent to overstep sovereign powers, see ante § 23.
Grounds on which an act of congress may be declared void, see ante § 19.
Legislative evasions, see post § 113.

Federal limitations, see post § 116 et seq.
As to works of internal improvement, see post XV.
Power over exemptions and homesteads, see post § 290.
Federal decisions as rule in state courts, and vice versa, see Courts, IV.

¶ 524. Constitutional restrictions upon the power of the legislature are not to be enlarged by construction.—Fort-Street Union Depot Co. v. Commissioner of Railroads, 118 Mich. 340.

§ 113. Evasions by indirection.

See also post ¶ 617.
Imposing impossible conditions on right to vote, see post § 252.
Authorizing aid bonds to evade prohibition respecting internal improvements, see post § 284.

¶ 525. What the legislature is prohibited from doing directly it cannot do indirectly; therefore it cannot (this was prior to the amendment to Const., art. 15, § 10) authorize mining corporations to renew their corporate existence beyond the constitutional period of thirty years.—Taggart, Attorney General ex rel. Mason v. Perkins, 73 Mich. 303.

¶ 526. A result absolutely interdicted cannot be accomplished by indirection; therefore the legislature cannot enlarge the boundaries of a city by annexing parts of adjoining townships when by so doing they alter the boundaries of representative districts in violation of Const., art. 4, § 4, Act of April 12, 1873, enlarging Detroit, held void.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116.

¶ 527. While it was incompetent for the legislature directly to license the sale of liquors, it could not act indirectly through municipal authorities by granting them power to do so.—Dewar v. People, 40 Mich. 401.

¶ 528. The legislature being prohibited from granting divorces (Const., art. 4, § 26), it was held that a legislative enactment authorizing a court to grant a divorce for a cause not sufficient by the general laws (e. g., the wife's insanity) was void, as conflicting with this provision.—Teft v. Teft, 3 Mich. 67.

¶ 529. Const., art. 4, § 23, prohibits the legislature from discontinuing highways laid out by township authorities. Held, that an act declaring certain township highways to be state roads, thus enabling the legislature to vacate them, is void.—Davies v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 295.

§ 114. Territorial limitations on state power.

Doctrine as to extraterritorial force of laws and comity, see Conflict of Laws, I.
Power to define as crime acts not wholly within state, see also post § 195.
Jurisdiction of crimes on Great Lakes, see also post ¶ 884.

¶ 530. There is no constitutional objection to Comp. L. 1857, § 5944; How. St., § 9420, which provides for the prosecution and punishment here of a homicide committed by a mortal blow, etc., out of the state, from which death results within it. There is a crime consummated within the state.—Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320.

§ 115. The Bill of Rights.

Federal guaranties, see post §§ 116-120.
Fifteenth Federal Amendment, see post § 252, ¶ 1085.
Language and provisions of Bill, see Const., Art. II, §§ 1-21.

¶ 531. The bills of rights in the American constitutions have not been drafted for the introduction of new law, but to secure old principles against abrogation or violation; they are conservatory, rather than reformatory.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

§ 116. Federal limitations and guaranties.

Due process clause, see post V.
Impairment of contracts clause, see post VI.
Equal protection and privileges and immunities clauses, see post X.
Federal encroachment on states, see post §§ 124, 125.
Respecting treaties, coinage and bills of credit, legal tender, etc., see U. S. Const., Art. 1, § 10.
Respecting duties and charges on imports and exports, tonnage duties, ships of war, troops, compacts, or war, see U. S. Const., Art. I, § 10, ¶(2), (3).

¶ 532. The fourth and fifth amendments to the national constitution are limitations upon federal, not upon state, powers.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

§ 117. ——Commerce clause.

See U. S. Const., Art. I, § 8, ¶ (3).
For the operation and effect of this clause, see Commerce.
Validity of Initial Carriers' Act, see Commerce, § 2.

§ 118. ——Full faith and credit clause.

See U. S. Const., Art. IV, § 1.
Full faith and credit clause as applied to judgments of sister states, see Foreign Judgments.

§ 119. ——Fugitives from justice.

See U. S. Const., Art. IV, § 1 ¶ (2).
For the operation of this clause, see Extradition.

§ 120. ——Republican form of government and protection from invasion and domestic violence.

See U. S. Const., Art. IV, § 4.

¶ 533. The provision of U. S. Const., art. 4, § 4, providing that the "United States shall guarantee to every state in this union a republican form of government" was not violated by the enactment of Local Acts 1901, No. 315, providing for alteration of certain school districts by taking territory from such school districts and adding it to another school district.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; affirming 131 Mich. 639.

§ 121. Navigable waters.

Powers over navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, II; Commerce.
Paramountcy of maritime law to state legislation, see also Admiralty, ¶ 3.

¶ 534. Some act of the sovereign power, direct or derivative, is necessary to authorize the interruption of a navigable stream, and the only limitations of legislative power in the matter of bridging such streams are those of the Constitution and laws of the United States and the provision of Const. 1850, art. 18, § 4, requiring consent of the board of supervisors of the county where the bridge is located.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

§ 122. Relation between federal power and state police power.

Effect of XIVth Amendment, see post ¶ 578.
Relation of state commerce regulations to federal and interstate subjects, see Commerce.

¶ 535. The police power of the state is subject to the limitations of the federal constitution.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477; affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 536. No ordinary exercise of congressional authority can take from a state any portion of its general police power. The acts of congress assume the existence of state regulations.—City of Coldwater v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617.

¶ 537. A state may not tax the wholesale importation of liquors from other states. This is not a legitimate exercise of the police power.—Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; reversing 53 Mich. 264.

¶ 538. It is within the police power of a state to punish the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians and persons of Indian descent, though they are citizens of the United States and of the State of Michigan.—People v. Gebhard, 151 Mich. 192.

§ 123. Concurrent powers; supersession of state by federal action.

Effect of Bankruptcy Act, see Bankruptcy, § 1.
Effect of Interstate Commerce Acts, see Commerce, § 3.
Authority of state over national banks, see Banking, § 90.

¶ 539. An affirmative power in congress is not necessarily incompatible with a like power in the state, but in the exercise of these powers by the two governments, if there be a conflict between them, the law of the state becomes inoperative.—Robinson v. Rice, 3 Mich. 235.

¶ 540. A state law yields only to the extent of its collision with the federal constitution.—McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; affirming 92 Mich. 377.

§ 124. Federal encroachment on states.

See also Banking, §§ 88, 89.
State encroachment, see post § 126.

¶ 541. Section 11 (k) of the Federal Reserve Act of Dec. 23, 1913, in so far as it grants to national banks the right to act as trustees, executors and administrators, has no natural connection with the carrying on of federal fiscal operations, is a direct invasion of the sovereignty of the state over the devolution of estates and the conducting of private business within the state, the creation of corporations, and the qualification and duties of such as may engage in the business of acting as trustees, executors and administrators, and is unconstitutional.—Attorney General ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Bay City, 192 Mich. 640; reversed in 244 U. S. 416, 61 L ed. 1233, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734.

§ 125. ——Documentary stamp legislation.

¶ 542. So much of the internal revenue law as required process in state courts to be stamped, as a condition of the validity of legal proceedings, was unconstitutional and void.—Fifield v. Close, 15 Mich. 505.

¶ 543. Congress has no power to prescribe rules of evidence for the state courts; and therefore the act of congress which declared that certain instruments should not be received as evidence in any court unless stamped as required by the act was applicable only to the federal courts.—Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170; Sammons v. Halloway, 21 Mich. 162.

¶ 544. Congress has power to lay stamp duties and to enforce collection of them by proper penalties; but to make void a contract made in one of the states, between the citizens thereof, that is permitted by the local law, is not a proper penalty under our political system.—Sammons v. Halloway, 21 Mich. 162.

§ 126. State encroachment on federal rights; patents, shipping, etc.

Federal encroachment on states, see ante §§ 124, 125.
Taxation of national banks and their stock, see Taxes, I, II.
In matters of interstate commerce, see Commerce.
Exclusiveness of rights under patents and powers of state respecting same, see Patents.
Relative rights in the public lands, see Public Lands.

¶ 545. Where any right or privilege is subject to the regulations of congress it is not competent for state laws to impose conditions which shall interfere with the rights or diminish their value.—Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309.

¶ 546. The state can punish frauds committed upon its citizens by any manner of false pretenses, but cannot punish those done under color of rights held from the United States on any different grounds from others.—Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309.

¶ 547. The Michigan statute (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1565. 1566) imposing unusual conditions on the transfer of patent rights by requiring notes given therefor to show it, and making it a misdemeanor to take or transfer them otherwise, is unconstitutional as impairing rights that are regulated and protected by congress.—Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309.

¶ 548. State legislation interfering with the rights conferred by letters patent under United States law is void as an invasion of national authority. But a municipal ordinance requiring peddlers to obtain a license is no such interference, even though the peddler be the manufacturer and patentee of the articles sold.—City of Coldwater v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617.

¶ 549. R. S. 1846, chap. 81, tit. 19, § 10, How. St., § 6193, providing that every mortgage of goods and chattels shall be absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor unless the mortgage shall be filed in the office of the township clerk where the mortgagor resides is void so far as relates to mortgages on enrolled vessels, because in conflict with the law of congress relating to mortgages on said vessels.—Robinson v. Rice, 3 Mich. 235.

V. DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

§ 127. In general; definition and elements.

Application of clause to statutes of particular kinds, see post § 145 et seq.
Persons, corporations, property and rights within operation of the clause, see post §§ 135-141.
What constitutes "deprivation," see post § 141.
Nature of hearing or trial required, see post §§ 130-132.
Requisites of warrant or ground for arrest, see post § 144.
Errors in procedure as denial of due process, see post § 133.
In contempt and criminal cases, see post §§ 142-144.
Construction of statute as implying due process for purpose of sustaining it, see ante § 25.
Due process clause in state constitution, see Const., Art II, § 16.

¶ 550. The words "due process of law," as used in Const., art. 6, § 32, mean the law of the land; by which is to be understood laws which are general in their operation, and not special acts of legislation passed to affect the rights of particular individuals against their will, and in a way in which the same rights of other persons are not affected by existing laws.—Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Attorney General v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358.

¶ 551. The constitutional guaranty of due process simply preserves to the people rights which had existed for centuries, and which had been enjoyed according to the course of the common law, and means such an exercise of governmental power as is sanctioned by settled maxims of law, under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribed.—People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148.

¶ 552. Due process of law is not necessarily judicial process.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

¶ 553. Due process is not necessarily judicial process. Administrative process, which has been regarded as necessary in government and sanctioned by long usage, is as much due process of law as any other.—Welmer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

¶ 554. The due process of law required by the constitution means that notice or summons by which a party is tendered his day in court, with a right to frame an issue and be heard before a judgment can be rendered or execution issued which shall take away his liberty or property.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 234.

¶ 555. Due process of law does not mean that removals from constitutional offices may not be made without the intervention of courts.—Attorney General v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358.

¶ 556. An interested municipality cannot be final judge in its own cause (determining that a highway existed).—Sheldon v. Village of Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383.

¶ 557. Personal liberty is not held subject to state comity or on any less tenure than constitutional right.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

¶ 558. A person cannot be restrained of his liberty unless the case made clearly brings him within some rule of law permitting the restraint.—People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215.

§ 128. Notice, charges and hearing.

See also ante ¶ 554.
Presumption that notice was intended, see ante § 23.
Stockholders or members as bound by notice to representatives or by corporate presence, see also post ¶ 710.
In local assessment proceedings, see post § 155.

¶ 559. Every person is entitled to his day in court whenever his interests are involved, and to due notice of the proceedings, and to reasonable opportunity to appear and defend.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636; Prince v. Clark, 81 Mich. 167; City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94; Township of Caledonia v. Rose, 94 Mich. 216.

¶ 560. Removal from a county office without the specific charges and findings required by statute is not by "due process of law."—People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187.

¶ 561. If the proceedings under the statute for incorporating villages at the will of electors could be treated as judicial action the act would be defective, since there is no provision for any process or notice to subject parties interested to the jurisdiction or for giving them any effective hearing if desired.—People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

¶ 562. Where a statute fixes the time and place of meeting of any board or tribunal, no special notice to parties interested is required, the statute being in itself sufficient notice.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

§ 129. Personal service.

¶ 563. The tax law of 1893 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206), providing in section 62 for judicial fixing of a day for hearing, and in section 66 for four weeks' publication, which "shall be equivalent to a personal service of notice on all persons" interested in the land specified, affords due process of law though no personal service is provided for as a step in selling and divesting title to the land. The proceeding is one substantially in rem and not one between parties such as requires personal service.—Ball v. Ridge Copper Co., 118 Mich. 7; Youngs v. Peters, 118 Mich. 45; Hooker v. Bond, 118 Mich. 255.

¶ 564. The general tax law is not unconstitutional in that it provides for the foreclosure of the lien of the state, and the sale of the property, of private persons without service of process; substituted service being sustained in proceedings in rem.—Toolan v. Longyear, 144 Mich. 55; affirmed in 209 U. S. 414, 52 L. ed. 859, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506.

¶ 565. Laws 1893, Act No. 206, § 61 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1829), relating to the preparing and filing by the auditor general as soon as practicable after June 1st, with the clerk of the circuit court, of a petition for the sale of land for taxes delinquent for more than one year prior to the 1st day of May of the year in which the petition is filed, and providing for the entry of an order that the petition be brought to a hearing at a specified time and place at which persons desiring to contest the same may appear and file their objections, and that the petition, with the order thereon must be published at least once a week for four weeks prior to the time fixed for hearing in some newspaper circulating in the county and if there is no such newspaper that the petition and order be printed and copies furnished to each voter in the county and copies posted in three public places in each township, and declaring that such publication shall be the equivalent of personal service of notice of the proceedings, does not violate the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment to the federal constitution because of the mere fact that notice by publication of the proceedings is substituted for personal service.—Longyear v. Toolan, 209 U. S. 414, 52 L. ed. 859, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506, affirming 144 Mich. 55.

In criminal cases, see post §§ 143, 144.
In contempt cases, see post § 142.
Due process as essential in judgment to make it a binding adjudication, see also Former Adjudication, I.

¶ 566. The provision that "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law," as applied to proceedings of a judicial character, was intended to secure to the citizen the right to a trial, according to the forms of law, of the questions of his liability and responsibility before his person or his property shall be condemned.—Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139.

¶ 567. The trial must be by an impartial tribunal, and judgment must precede the deprivation of property.—Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139.

¶ 568. A railroad company is not deprived of its property without due process of law on the ground that it is deprived of a full hearing on the matter of valuation, where a tax is levied under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1933 et seq.), providing that the board of state tax commissioners shall constitute a state board of assessors, who are to assess the railroad and certain other corporate property in the state, and prescribing as the rate of taxation, the average rate of taxation levied upon the property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed, where the statute names a time and place for the sessions of the assessing board, gives to any person or company interested the right to be heard and also authorizes the board to correct the valuation, since one hearing is sufficient to constitute due process.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; affirming 138 Fed. 223.

¶ 569. Comp. Laws 1897, § 3406, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6231, relating to assessments for city improvements, is not invalid under the due process clause of the 14th Amendment to the federal constitution as not affording to the property owner notice and opportunity of hearing upon the questions of what lands, if any, are specially benefited by the improvement, and therefore to be included in the assessment district, and what is the amount of the special benefit, since he is given a thoroughly efficient opportunity to test the legality of the charge against him and in the legality of such charge is necessarily involved the legality of all which precedes it and of which it is the consequence.—Voight v. City of Detroit, 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337; affirming 123 Mich. 547.

In criminal cases, see post §§ 143, 144.

¶ 570. The Assignment Law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l), which confers upon the judge in vacation the authority to hear and determine summarily upon the question of a debtor's insolvency and preference of creditors, violates the prohibition against taking property "without due process of law," since by constituting the orders of the judge as final and conclusive, it deprives the debtor of the right of trial by jury.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 571. Due process of law does not include trial by jury for violation of a municipal by-law which relates to offenses not embraced in the general criminal legislation of the state and one charged with the violation of an ordinance restricting the use of public places even though punishable by imprisonment, waives the right to jury trial by failure to demand it as provided in the city charter.—In re Cox, 129 Mich. 635.

¶ 572. A provision in a city charter that in prosecution for violation of an ordinance the right of trial by jury shall be waived by failure to demand it is not unconstitutional as to taking away due process of law.—In re Cox, 129 Mich. 635.

§ 132. ——Right of appeal or review.

Power to grant or deny appeal or review, see post § 191.

¶ 573. The right of appeal is not essential to due process of law.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

§ 133. Denial by errors in procedure.

See also post ¶¶ 613, 948.
Judicial construction as abridging privileges and immunities, see post ¶ 985.

¶ 574. The omission of the judge of a state court wherein condemnation proceedings are taken to charge the jury as to a particular element of damages regarding which no special instruction has been asked by counsel, is, if error at all, not such error as denies due process of law or the equal protection of the laws, but is mere matter of administrative procedure.—Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. St. Rep. 445, affirming 103 Mich. 556.

¶ 575. Where a Michigan statute governing condemnation proceedings provides for an appeal by written notice, specifying the objections, none but specified objections to be passed upon, the refusal of the state Supreme Court to hear counsel upon the question of the necessity for taking the property, when no objection on such ground has been specified in the notice of appeal, does not deprive respondent of due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws.—Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct., Rep. 445, affirming 103 Mich. 556.

¶ 576. A state cannot be deemed guilty of a violation of its obligations under the Constitution of the United States because of a decision, even if erroneous, of its highest court, while acting within its jurisdiction.—In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191, affirming 42 Fed. 217.

§ 134. Object and effect of XIVth Amendment.

Equality clause in state constitution, see post ¶ 889.

¶ 577. U. S. Const., amend. 14, was not designed to interfere with the power of the state to protect the lives, liberty and property of its citizens, nor with the exercise of that power in the adjudications of the courts of a state in administering the process provided by the state laws.—In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191, affirming 42 Fed. 217.

¶ 578. The right of the state to exercise its police power is not affected by the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution.—People v. Damm, 183 Mich. 554.

§ 135. Public and persons inhibited.

Persons, property and rights protected, see post §§ 136-141.

¶ 579. The legal safeguards of property exist against the state or the municipality as well as against individuals; they have no more power than a private citizen to deprive an owner of his possessions.—Burford v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98.

¶ 580. The fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution is addressed to the states and not to congress.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

§ 136. Persons and corporations protected.

By privileges and immunities clause, see post § 230.
Public and persons or corporations inhibited, see ante § 135.
Vested rights in charter or franchise, see post § 245.
Particular laws affecting corporations, see post §§ 159-166.

¶ 581. The constitutional principle that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law applies to artificial as well as to natural persons, and to municipal corporations in their private capacity.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

¶ 582. A corporation has the same right to the protection of its property as a natural person.—People v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 52 Mich. 277; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 62 Mich. 564.

¶ 583. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 109, § 14, forbidding contributions for nomination and election expenses by corporations does not deprive a corporation of any property without due process of law.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

§ 137. ——Municipalities.

¶ 584. Municipal corporations are protected in their rights to property which they have lawfully acquired for local purposes, and cannot be deprived of it by the state.—City of Detroit v. Detroit & Howell Plank Road Co., 43 Mich. 140.

¶ 585. The authority of a legislature to determine what shall be the extent of a city's capacity to acquire and hold property is not equivalent to, nor does it contain within itself, the authority to deprive the city of property actually acquired by legislative permission. As to property thus held for its own private purposes, a city is to be regarded as a constituent in state government, and is entitled to the like protection in its property rights as any natural person who is also a constituent. The right of the state as regards such property is one of regulation, not appropriation.—People ex rel. Detroit Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 Mich. 228.

§ 138. Property protected.

Vested rights, what are, see post §§ 241-248.
Liability of property to destruction under the police power, see also ante § 98.
Municipal property, see ante § 137.

¶ 586. Property does not consist merely of the title and possession, but includes the right to make any legal use of it, and the right to pledge or mortgage, or to sell and transfer it; the right to contract a debt or other personal obligation is a right of property.—Kuhn v. Common Council of Detroit, 70 Mich. 534.

¶ 587. Where a statute makes a contract void for want of compliance with the requirements of the stamp law, the right to avoid it for this defect is not "property"which is protected by constitutional provision; and congress has full power by a subsequent act to waive the penal consequences, and make the contract valid on the proper stamp being affixed.—Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 214.

¶ 588. The right to have one's property protected does not depend on the character of the property.—People v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 52 Mich. 277.

¶ 589. A common-law right of action is property, and as such is within the rules of constitutional protection.—Dunlay v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 50 Mich. 470.

¶ 590. The property rights of a railroad company in its right of way are protected. —Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 35 Mich. 265; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 62 Mich. 564.

¶ 591. A railroad company cannot be required by statute to pay for constructing across its right of way a highway not necessitated by the existence of the railroad.—People v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 52 Mich. 277; Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507.

§ 139. Rights and liberties protected.

Depriving of liberty of occupation or contract as unusual punishment for crime, see post §§ 202-203.
Business rights and occupations subject to police power, see also ante III.

¶ 592. The provision in Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 8, requiring the surety in a liquor bond to state that he is not engaged in the sale of any liquor mentioned in the act, and is not a surety upon any other bond required by the act, violates the constitutional principle that no one shall be deprived of liberty or property without due process of law; and it also violates U. S. Const., amend. 14. The right to sign a bond or other contract cannot be made to depend upon the business in which one is engaged.—Kuhn v. Detroit Common Council, 70 Mich. 534.

¶ 593. Personal liberty, which is guaranteed to every citizen under our constitution and laws, consists of the right of locomotion, —to go where one pleases, and when, and do that which may lead to one's business or pleasure, only so far restrained as the rights of others may make it necessary for the welfare of all citizens.—Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573.

¶ 593a. Sections 1 and 6, Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 329, which provide in substance that all agreements not to engage in any avocation, employment, pursuit, trade, profession, or business, except where the only object of the restraint is to protect the vendee or transferee of a trade, pursuit, avocation, profession, or business, or the good will thereof sold and transferred for a valuable consideration in good faith, shall be void, are not void as in restraint of the right to contract, and violating Const. U. S., amend. 14.—Grand Union Tea Co. v. Lewitsky, 153 Mich. 244.

¶ 594. The right to issue and sell, or to buy and sell securities is "property" and "liberty" within the due process of law clause of the federal constitution.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

§ 140. ——Rights in office.

¶ 595. The legislature cannot by any act deprive a person of a right to hold an office to which he has been elected or appointed and the duties of which he has assumed, except by due process of law.—People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187.

¶ 596. Holding and exercising an office to which a person has been elected during the term for which he has been elected is a right of which he cannot be deprived without due process of law, and this requires notice to the party, a hearing and determination. —People ex rel. Clay v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411.

¶ 597. A public office cannot be called "property" within the meaning of the provisions of the federal and state constitutions against depriving any person of property without due rocess of law.—Attorney General v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358.

¶ 598. U. S. Const., amend. 14, § 1, providing that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," is not infringed by Const., art. 12, § 8, which provides for the removal by the governor of certain state officers.—Attorney General v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358.

¶ 599. Local Acts 1907, No. 461, requiring the county treasurer of Gratiot County to deposit county funds in a designated depository, and to account for the interest thereon, does not impair any existing or vested right of the treasurer where the act was in force before he took office.—Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co. v. Munson, 157 Mich. 505.

¶ 600. Act 77 of 1885 made the poor commissioners of Detroit ex officio county superintendents, but they are no longer so, inasmuch as act 273 of 1887, leaving them out, and confining the board to appointed members, was valid.—Jackson v. James, 74 Mich. 733.

§ 141. "Depriving" or taking property or liberty.

Distinction of inheritance tax from a taking or deprival, see post ¶ 652.
Destruction of value of property by restrictive or prohibitory liquor laws, see also post ¶ 725.

¶ 601. The prohibitory statute of Feb. 3, 1855, did not destroy or affect the right of property in spirituous liquors, or prevent title being transmitted, though it rendered sales unprofitable by depriving the vendor of the ordinary advantages of a sale, and also affixed certain penalties.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 602. The fee of the soil beneath the waters of the great lakes being in the state, and the rights of riparian owners being limited to the enjoyment of such easements as were at common-law incident to the ownership of lands bordering upon navigable streams, Pub. Acts 1895, No. 112, setting aside for public shooting grounds certain submerged lands in Lake Erie, and making it unlawful to destroy the rushes and other submarine vegetation on such lands, is not unconstitutional as depriving the riparian owner of property rights without due notice and compensation.—People v. Silberwood, 110 Mich. 103.

¶ 603. Private property of the City of Detroit is not taken without due process of law by a decree requiring it to abate a nuisance by enlarging an inadequate sewer into which the village of Highland Park has rightfully discharged sewage for fifteen years under a decree of a court of chancery and the payment of annual rentals.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 604. Workmen's Compensation Act, Pub. Acts 1912 (First Extra Session), No. 10, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 3939-4008, does not deprive municipality subject to it of property without due process of law.—Wood v. City of Detroit, 188 Mich. 547; Purdy v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 188 Mich. 573.

¶ 605. Local Acts 1895, No. 337, § 27, which incorporates into the charter of Detroit a provision directing the city treasurer to place to the credit of the board of health a certain sum of money for the maintenance of the board for the fiscal year, by transfer from any other funds in the city treasury, and which provides that the sum thus transferred shall be repaid from moneys collected from liquor taxes, does not conflict with U. S. Const., art. 14, § 1, as taking money or property from the city, the receipts from liquor taxes being absolutely under the control of the legislature.—Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 606. There was no deprivation of school districts of their property without due process of law, within the 14th amendment to the federal constitution, by the enactment of Local Acts 1901, No. 315, providing for the alteration of certain school districts by taking territory from such school districts and adding it to another school district.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; affirming 131 Mich. 639.

¶ 607. If a statute has a real and substantial relation to the public welfare, if it provides for a deprivation by due process of law, and if it affords an equal protection of the laws, it is valid, notwithstanding its enforcement will deprive a person subject thereto of his liberty or property.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

§ 142. In contempt cases.

¶ 608. Comp. Laws 1915, § 13765, providing that each judge of probate shall have power to issue warrants for the apprehension and imprisonment of any person who shall refuse or neglect to obey any of the court's orders, is not invalid as not affording equal protection of the law and due process of law within the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution.—In re Merrill, 200 Mich. 244.

¶ 609. The purpose of Comp. L. 1915, providing that the judge of probate shall have power to issue warrants directed to any officer, requiring him to apprehend any person who shall refuse or neglect to perform any order, sentence or decree of the probate court and requiring such officer to apprehend and imprison such person in the county jail until he shall perform such orders, sentence or decree, or be delivered by due course of law, in authorizing such warrants was to provide an effective, if somewhat summary, method of enforcing the orders of the probate court, and a warrant so issued is in the nature of a body execution to enforce an order of the court and may be issued by the judge, without a previous order therefor, and without notice to the petitioner, without constituting lack of due process of law.—Ex parte Merrill, 245 Fed. 778.

§ 143. In criminal cases.

Criminal prosecution resulting in acquittal on ground of insanity, see post § 150.
Summary judgment on forfeited criminal recognizance, see post ¶ 625.

¶ 610. Due process of law in criminal cases includes the right to trial by a common law jury, to the aid of counsel in making defense, and to have the jury properly instructed concerning the law by a competent court.—In re Silverthorn, 73 Mich. 644.

¶ 611. Before a citizen is subjected to the degradation of imprisonment in a state prison, he should be permitted to avail himself of all his constitutional rights; these include "due process of law" in criminal cases, which has not yet been conferred upon justices of the peace.—In re Silverthorn, 73 Mich. 644.

¶ 611a. The Detroit charter of 1883 (§ 13, ch. 4) provides for a mitigated punishment as municipal grievances of the offenses of city officers' accepting and soliciting bribes, and also provides for a special procedure in the recorder's court. Held, that such offenses are within the general statutes punishing bribery (How. St., § 9241, 9242), and that the charter provisions are invalid.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 612. While the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States undoubtedly forbids any arbitrary deprivation of life, liberty or property, and in the administration of criminal justice requires that no different or higher punishment shall be imposed on one than is imposed on all for like offenses it was not designed to interfere with the power of the state to protect the lives, liberty and property of its citizens nor with the exercise of that power in the adjudications of the courts of a state in administering the process provided by the law of the state.—In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191, affirming 42 Fed. 217.

¶ 613. The Supreme Court of Michigan did not exceed its jurisdiction or deliver a judgment abridging the privileges or immunities of an attorney at law or deprive him of the law of the land of his domicile, in violation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution by affirming a judgment of conviction for embezzlement of funds of his clients under How. St., § 9151, as an "agent" upon a plea of guilty of embezzlement as an attorney at law on the ground that the word "agent" in the statute applied to attorneys at law, the defendant having been subjected, as all persons within the state are, to the law in the regular course of administration through courts of justice.—In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191; affirming 42 Fed. 217.

¶ 614. A convict who was sentenced under the indeterminate sentence act of 1903 (Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136) and is still detained in prison after the expiration of the maximum term of two years named in the sentence on the ground that because he had been twice previously convicted of a felony the law provided a maximum term of five years in such a case and such term had not lapsed, and he was not entitled to parole, is not imprisoned without due process of law and is not denied equal protection of the laws within the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, since such act provides for the granting of a favor to persons convicted of crime who are confined in a state prison and the state may attach such conditions to the granting of the form it deems best, or it may, in its discretion, exclude such classes of persons from participation in the favor as may to it seem fit, and it is immaterial that the convict is not given a hearing upon the question of prior conviction.—Ughbanks v. Armstrong, 208 U. S. 481, 52 L. ed. 582, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 372.

¶ 615. It is not an invasion of constitutional right to punish conduct in fact disorderly and dangerous to and destructive of good order, such as loitering about the streets and bar rooms of a city in idleness, without apparent habitation and without any means of support, and it is not certain that a person so acting is not a disorderly person, punishable at common law.—In re Stegenga, 133 Mich. 55.

§ 144. ——Requisites of the process, warrant or arrest.

Constitutional requisites of warrants, see also post § 197.
General necessity for warrant, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail.

¶ 616. Due process of law for the restraint of personal liberty requires a warrant issued by a court or magistrate upon a proper showing or finding, except in cases of reasonable belief of treason or felony, or breach of the peace committed in the presence of the officer.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 617. Acts that do not embrace some sort of violent and dangerous conduct cannot be declared by a statute to be breaches of the peace, thus evading the constitutional prohibition of arrests without process; and therefore the provision of Laws 1887, Act No. 313,

§ 17, authorising the arrest without process as for a breach of the peace of one selling liquors on certain days or after certain hours, is invalid.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 618. So far as the opinion in Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549, used language implying that the legislature could not extend the right to arrest without process for other misdemeanors, not amounting to a breach of the peace, committed in the officer's presence, such language was unnecessary to a determination of the question there involved, and should not be followed.—Burroughs v. Eastman, 101 Mich. 419.

¶ 619. The due process clause does not prevent the legislature from enacting as a part of a city charter that police officers of the city shall have power to arrest without process all persons who, in the presence of the arresting officer, shall be engaged in violating any ordinance of the common council of the city (Grand Rapids Charter, 1891, p. 60; Local Acts, 1885, p. 83); and due process in such a case is not determined by what would have justified arrest without warrant when the constitution was adopted.—Burroughs v. Eastman, 101 Mich. 419.

§ 145. Acts affecting remedies and procedure.

Statutory rights of action, see also post § 147.

Validity of retroactive laws, see post §§ 235-237.

¶ 620. Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, providing that an action in assumpsit may be brought to recover the damages where an injury has been caused by fraudulent representations or conduct for which an action on the case for fraud or deceit would lie, is not unconstitutional.—City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514.

¶ 620a. Comp. L. 1897, ch. 308, § 25, which provides that a landlord who obtains restitution of premises after appeal, may, at his election, sue and recover on the appeal bond, or bring an action for treble damages under section 24, is not unconstitutional though an action on the bond precludes a subsequent action under section 24 for items which could not be recovered in the action on the bond, since section 24 provides a new remedy and the legislature may prescribe conditions under which a statutory remedy may be used.—Schellenberg v. Frank, 139 Mich. 183.

¶ 621. The statute providing for proceedings at law in the nature of a judgment creditor's bill, criticized as inadequate to reach or protect third persons entitled to due process of law in cases where transactions are attacked for fraud or illegality.—Reed v. Baker, 42 Mich. 272; Ehlers v. Stoeckle, 37 Mich. 261.

¶ 622. Public Acts 1897, Act 99 (Comp. L. 1897, § 10208), providing that in all suits in aid of execution, the complainant shall make a prima facie case by introducing in evidence the judgment against the principal defendant, the execution with the levy thereon indorsed and proof of the conveyance complained of, is constitutional and is not a deprivation of "due process of law" in failing to require the giving of some evidence of a fraudulent intent by the debtor, shared by his grantee.—Crane v. Waldron, 133 Mich. 73.

¶ 623. Const., art. 6, § 32, in protecting property rights, was intended only to protect persons from being deprived of their property without their assent unless by due process of law; therefore the Justices' Act of 1855, § 7029, authorizing the circuit court, on rendering judgment against an appellant, to enter it, also, on motion against the surety in the appeal, is valid; the bond is considered as executed by the surety in contemplation of the statute, and consequently operates as an assent by him to the entry of judgment in such manner.—Chappee v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 53.

¶ 624. The Joint Debtor Act (How. St., §§ 7730, 7732), authorizing judgment in form to be entered against all, though only one has been served with process, was intended to supersede the necessity of the plaintiff's proceeding to outlawry against one not found or brought into court, which was essential before judgment could pass against those served with process; and it is not unconstitutional.—Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 Mich. 316.

¶ 625. Whether the statute of 1861, permitting the entering up of judgment summarily, without suit or notice, upon a criminal recognizance two days after forfeiture is entered of record, unless cause to the contrary be shown, was constitutional, quære; the court being divided.—Lang v. People, 14 Mich. 439.

¶ 626. It is within the power of a state to make the whole administration of an estate a single proceeding and to provide that one who has undertaken it within the jurisdiction of the state court shall be subject to the order of the court in the matter until the administration is closed by distribution, and that he shall be required to account for and distribute all that he receives by the order of the probate court, even though he has become a nonresident.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 228 U. S. 346, 57 L. ed. 867, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; reversing 175 Fed. 667, 681.

¶ 627. A decree by the probate court in the state requiring an executor, who has become a nonresident, to render an account of all his receipts as executor and to deliver the assets of the estate to his appointed successor within the state, under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 9428, 9435 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 11139, 11146), providing for charging an executor in his account with the whole of the goods of the deceased that come to his possession and with waste in case of neglect to pay over the money in his hands, or of loss to the persons interested is not invalid because of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution when the steps taken are concurred in by the foreign court controlling his person and by the domestic court having jurisdiction of the cause.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 228 U. S. 346, 57 L. ed. 867, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; reversing 175 Fed. 667, 681.

§ 146. ——Limitations.

Requiring person in possession to sue tax title claimant, see post § 154.
Validity of retroactive laws, see post §§ 238, 239.

¶ 628. A legislative act retrospective in its operation, and cutting off all remedy for the lapse of time occurring before it became a law, would violate the constitutional provision against depriving a person of property without due process of law; and would therefore be void.—Price v. Hopkins, 13 Mich. 318.

¶ 629. The legislature has authority to shorten the period within which an existing cause of action may be prosecuted, provided it gives a reasonable opportunity.—Semer v. Auditor General, 133 Mich. 569.

¶ 630. Public Acts 1903, No. 84, imposing a limitation of six months within which an action to annul the state's title to lands previously deeded to the state as tax homestead lands is valid.—People v. Christian, 144 Mich. 247.

¶ 631. It seems that Pub. Acts 1899, No. 127, limiting the time within which tax deeds may be set aside, to six months, is valid.—Commissioner of State Land Office v. Auditor General, 131 Mich. 147.

¶ 632. The legislature has power to extend or repeal a statute of limitation, or abolish the rule of adverse possession, and such law will apply to cases where the period has not already run, or title had been previously acquired.—Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

¶ 633. The 1885 Tax Law, § 115 (Pub. Acts 1885, Act 153), providing that one claiming under a tax deed shall after five years' actual and peaceable "possession" be conclusively deemed the owner of the land, and section 116 providing that no action for the recovery of such land or "possession" thereof shall be brought against such person after the expiration of five years after the time when such action accrued, constitute a valid statute of limitations; they do not divest title without due process.—St. Mary's Power Co. v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co., 133 Mich. 470.

¶ 634. Public Acts 1901, No. 63, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13066, providing that the holder of a sheriff's certificate of sale of real estate shall be entitled to a sheriff's deed at any time within ten years from date of expiration of time of redemption, and that, if the time of redemption elapsed before the act took effect a deed might be given within five years after date the act took effect, but that if the deed was not taken and recorded within time limited by the act, the certificate should be void, held constitutional as a statute of limitations.—Pike v. Halpin, 188 Mich. 447.

§ 147. Imposing or limiting liabilities by statute.

Making taxes a personal charge recoverable by action, see post ¶ 678.
Stockholders' liability proceedings, see post § 166.

¶ 635. How. St., § 2035, which requires those who float logs in navigable streams, including such streams as are artificially made navigable for logs, to avoid obstructing them, and which provides that when they obstruct them through failure properly to drive their logs or break jams, others who find it necessary to put labor upon the obstructing logs may recover a reasonable compensation, is valid; the legislature may lawfully protect those who wish to avail themselves of artificial flooding, to the extent of requiring others to move obstructing logs at all reasonable times, whether the floods are natural or artificial.—Crane Lumber Co. v. Bellows, 117 Mich. 482.

¶ 636. An act (Laws 1887, Act No. 139, amending Laws 1885, Act No. 233), by which recovery of damages for injury to reputation from newspaper libels is prevented by limiting the recoverable damages to certain defined elements, deprives libeled persons of life, liberty or property without due process.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560; McGee v. Baumgartner, 121 Mich. 287.

§ 148. Laws for seizure or sale of property.

Under lien laws, see post § 149.
Labor claim laws against corporations, see post § 165.

Effect as destroying right of trial by jury, see post § 192, ¶ 819.

¶ 637. Under the boat and vessel law (Comp. L. 1857, ch. 149) a vessel might be seized and sold upon the mere assertion of a debt or demand, without any proof to substantiate the claim being made before a judicial tribunal, and without any judgment or decree of any such tribunal allowing the sale. It is therefore in conflict with Const., art. 6, § 32, and void.—Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113.

¶ 638. A provision for the sale of impounded beasts to pay costs and charges, if the owner, after notice, fails to reclaim the property, the surplus to belong to the owner, does not, although no judicial hearing is provided for, deprive him of his property without due process of law. For an illegal seizure a suit in replevin, or for the value, lies.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476.

¶ 639. A statute allowing animals running at large in a public highway to be taken by any person and publicly sold by a public officer, and providing that, after the expenses of the proceedings and of keeping the animals were paid, the remainder should be paid over to their owner, who should be allowed a certain time within which to redeem them, is to remedy a public grievance, and is not unconstitutional as divesting property rights without due process of law.—Campau v. Langley, 39 Mich. 451.

¶ 640. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 9234-9242, inclusive, as amended by Pub. Acts 1901, No. 55, authorizing chancery courts on published notice against persons not in esse to sell lands held under a life estate whenever it shall appear that the rights of interested parties will otherwise be jeopardized, is a valid exercise of legislative power.—Garrison v. Hecker, 128 Mich. 539.

§ 149. Lien laws.

¶ 641. The Mechanic's Lien Law of 1887 (How. St., §§ 8398a-8398n) held unconstitutional as a whole, because divesting title to land without the owner's act or default.—Spry Lumber Co. v. Sault Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 77 Mich. 199; Mellis v. Race, 78 Mich. 80.

¶ 642. The Mechanics' Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), is not unconstitutional as an unwarrantable abridgment of the freedom of contract, in that the owner is prohibited from paying according to the terms of the contract, and the contractor is prevented from obtaining his pay, whenever it appears from the contractor's sworn statement that there are bills outstanding in favor of subcontractors, laborers, or material men, as the owner is not required to make payments beyond the amount called for in the contract, and is fully protected by the statute, as he may refuse payment until the contractor provides a sworn statement, or he may make payments without the sworn statement if the money paid is distributed, in accordance with the statute, and the owner's contract must be presumed to have been made in accordance with the statute.—Smalley v. Gearing, 121 Mich. 190.

¶ 643. Laws 1881, Act No. 145, gives laborers for a contractor a lien against the owner of the logs, though there is no privity of contract between such laborers and owner; and in so doing the act is constitutional.—Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 Mich. 509.

¶ 644. The log-lien law (Laws of 1887, Act No. 229), is not objectionable for holding the owner of the logs liable to the amount of the contract price to his contractor's laborers, even though he has fully paid the contractor.—Federspiel v. Johnstone, 87 Mich. 303.

¶ 645. The statute of 1855 (Comp. L. 1857, § 1942), for the incorporation of log-driving, etc., companies, held unconstitutional, in so far as it gives a lien for driving logs without consent of the owner and when there is no private right in the corporation; as it deprived persons of their property without due process of law, since under the statute the corporation and its agents must of necessity determine when the emergency has arisen which justifies assuming control, and they must also assess their own charges and sell the property to pay them.—Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139.

§ 150. Lunacy proceedings.

¶ 646. Laws 1873, Act No. 168, providing for the confinement in the insane hospital at the state prison of such persons as are acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity, does not furnish adequate means for enforcing its provisions for releasing them when such confinement becomes unnecessary, and is unconstitutional, as contemplating inquisitorial and ex parte proceedings, which might result in restraining personal liberty without due process of law.—Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1.

§ 151. Eminent domain and condemnation.

Effect of errors in condemnation proceedings, see also ante § 133.

Taking property for drains, see post § 155.

¶ 647. U. S. Const., amend. 14, providing that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law, is not violated by a statute permitting, in condemnation cases, the taking of possession prior to the final determination of the amount of compensation and payment thereof, if adequate provision is made for compensation when the amount is determined.—Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445, affirming 103 Mich. 556.

¶ 648. For want of jurisdiction extending so far, a probate court cannot constitutionally make an order under How. St., § 3340, allowing a railroad company to remain in possession of land pending condemnation proceedings.—Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. Livingston County Probate Judge, 63 Mich. 676.

§ 152. Tax laws and taxation.

Laws relating to collection, sale of property, and tax titles, see post §§ 153-155.
In local assessment proceedings, see post § 155.
Unequal protection of the laws, see post § 227.
Relative powers of departments, see ante § 47.
Taxing power and limitations in general, see Taxes, I.

¶ 649. The taking of property under pretense of taxation, for a purpose for which taxation is not admissible, is an unlawful confiscation, and not due process of law, and is therefore forbidden by Const., art. 6, § 32.—People ex rel. Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499.

¶ 650. Taxation for a local purpose cannot be sustained if the law authorizing it be unconstitutional, even though the tax be voted by a majority; for, so far as the minority are concerned, its enforcement deprives them of their property without due process of law.—Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477.

¶ 651. Local Acts 1905, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit is not unconstitutional as depriving the residents of a portion of the annexed territory of their property without due process through the means of illegal taxation.—Attorney General ex rel. Battishill v. Township Board of Springwells, 143 Mich. 523.

¶ 652. The inheritance tax, provided in Pub. Acts 1899, No. 188, is not unconstitutional for taking property without due process because of failure to provide for personal notice and opportunity to resist assessment as it is not taking legatee's property but imposes a condition upon his acquisition of it.—Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 487.

¶ 653. Taxation of domestic-owned shares in a foreign corporation and of the property of the foreign corporation within the state, and not taxing shares in a domestic corporation under like circumstances, is not offensive to the fourteenth amendment, where all owners of foreign corporation stock are taxed alike.—Thrall v. Guiney, 141 Mich. 392.

¶ 654. The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal constitution forbidding any state to deprive any person of his property without due process of law was not violated by the failure to provide for a hearing before the state board of tax assessors before the imposition of a tax upon railroad property under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1933 et seq., since a definite rate is fixed by the statute and by the Michigan Constitution, art. 14, § 11, as amended in 1900, providing that the legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation for such property as shall be assessed by a state board of assessors, and the rate of taxation on such property shall be the rate which the state board of assessors shall ascertain and determine is the average rate levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school and municipal purposes.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223;, affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 655. The rate of taxation of the property of railroad companies under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1933 et seq., providing for the assessment by the state board of assessors of the property of railroad companies at the average rate of taxation of the then current year levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school and municipal purposes, upon receipt of reports from each of the taxing districts, and for taxation of the property of the companies as assessed by it, at the rate as determined, is determined by the legislature and by the Michigan Constitution, art. 14, § 11, as amended in 1900, providing that the legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation for such property as shall be assessed by a state board of assessors, and the rate of taxation on such property shall be the rate which the state board of assessors shall ascertain and determine is the average rate levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school and municipal purposes, and is not determined by the local legislatures and assessing officers of the counties, cities, towns, villages and school districts of the state so as to constitute want of due process of law.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223; affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

§ 153. ——Collection and sale of property.

In making assessments, see also ante ¶¶ 568, 569.
Personal service, see also ante § 129.

¶ 656. Summary process to enforce the payment by a collector and his sureties of the taxes not returned by him (see How. St., § 1064), having been in use by express legislation, both before and ever since the adoption of the constitution, must be considered permitted by that instrument and regarded as due process of law.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201; Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 Mich. 54.

¶ 657. The provision in the tax law of 1853, that, "In case any person shall refuse or neglect to pay the tax imposed on him, the treasurer shall levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of said person, or of any goods and chattels in his possession," "and no claim of property to be made thereto by any other person shall be available to prevent a sale," but giving the owner of any property which might be thus seized and sold to pay the tax of another a remedy against the person taxed, held not unconstitutional.—Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251.

¶ 658. The validity of the provision of the charter of the City of Grand Rapids requiring the marshal to levy upon any personal property found on the premises assessed, to satisfy such assessment, is questioned but not decided.—Tompkins v. Johnson, 75 Mich. 181.

¶ 659. Public Acts 1893, No. 206, § 60, which subjects to sale and redemption in accordance with the provisions of that statute lands theretofore returned delinquent, does not, even though it has the effect of hastening the time of sale and of lessening the period for redemption as to such lands, conflict with Const., art. 6, § 32, providing that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law.—Muirhead v. Sands, 111 Mich. 487.

§ 154. ——Affecting titles or evidence of title.

Shortening time for redemption, see ante § 153, ¶ 659.
Limitation laws, see also ante § 146.

¶ 660. The provision in tax law of 1893, § 135, requiring, as a condition precedent to the recording of a deed, the filing with the register of deeds of a certificate that the taxes on the land for the previous five years have been paid, is not an unwarrantable infringement of property rights, nor are its provisions incapable of enforcement by the officers named therein.—Van Husan v. Heames, 96 Mich. 504.

¶ 661. That portion of the tax law of 1858, § 124, which makes a tax deed prima facie evidence of the legality of the proceedings to the date of the deed does not conflict with the constitution, and is valid.—Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329.

¶ 662. Comp. L. 1871, § 1129, providing that no sale for delinquent taxes shall be held invalid unless it be made to appear that all legal taxes were paid or tendered, and that all taxes shall be presumed to be legally assessed until the contrary is affirmatively shown, is unconstitutional so far as it sustains sales for taxes which are in part illegal.—Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 Mich. 561.

¶ 663. Comp. L. 1897, § 3870, making the tax roll prima facie evidence of the tax sought to be recovered, is not in conflict with the taxpayers' constitutional rights.—Township of Decatur v. Copley, 133 Mich. 546.

¶ 664. A tax deed pursuant to a sale made under Pub. Acts 1891, No. 200, wherein the state's title was conveyed by the county treasurer is valid; as even if it be conceded that at the time of the sale in question the conveyance was required to be made by the auditor general, the deed was validated under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 124, validating deeds made by county treasurers.—Hoffman v. Pack, Woods & Co., 123 Mich. 74, distinguishing Hall v. Perry, 72 Mich. 202, where sale was void.

¶ 665. Public Acts 1897, No. 229, General Tax Law, § 143, as amended by Pub. Acts 1901, No. 128, is unconstitutional in that it deprives one of property without due process of law, being an attempt to compel one who is in full possession of his property, and who thereby makes the most positive assertion of his rights, to resort to a court not to gain his own, but to restrain another from asserting an unwarrantable claim.—O'Connor v. Carpenter, 144 Mich. 240.

¶ 666. Public Acts 1897, No. 229 (General Tax Law, § 143), as amended by Pub. Acts 1901, No. 128 is not a curative act, but purports to be a statute of limitations, and makes no distinction between tax titles of varying degrees of validity. It cannot be sustained as amounting to a prohibition against raising a question of the validity of a tax title based on a defect arising out of an omission of an act which might originally have been dispensed with.—O'Connor v. Carpenter, 144 Mich. 240.

¶ 667. The General Tax Law, § 127 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 107), is not unconstitutional because it provides that the determination of the auditor general and the commissioner of the state land office as to when state tax lands shall become state homestead lands shall be conclusive unless assailed by suit within six months, though it applies to one in possession, if he has no rights to be protected.—Griffin v. Kennedy, 148 Mich. 583; O'Connor v. Carpenter, 144 Mich. 240, distinguished.

¶ 668. There is no infringement of private property rights in the enactment of a statute (Pub. Laws 1897, No. 229), which provides for six months' grace to the original purchaser of lands sold to the state for taxes and conveyed to private parties, because the state may provide for this measure of protection to delinquent owners, and one who buys a conditional title is not in a position to complain of the conditions.—Reed v. Auditor General, 146 Mich. 208.

§ 155. ——Local improvement, drain and assessment proceedings.

¶ 669. An act authorizing the cost of paving streets to be assessed upon the abutting property according to frontage is valid and is not violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, affirmed in 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

¶ 670. Local Acts of 1885, Act No. 292, and Local Acts of 1887, Act No. 436, amendatory of the charter of Grand Rapids, in so far as they provide for assessments for the payment of damages sustained by the regrading of streets, are wholly inoperative, in that they fail to provide for notice to the parties who are to be assessed to satisfy the judgments recovered by landowners entitled to such damages in proceedings provided for in said acts.—Sligh v. City of Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 497.

¶ 671. Comp. L. 1897, § 3406, providing that if the common council of a city believe that a portion of the city in the vicinity of a proposed improvement will be benefited thereby, they may determine that the whole or any just proportion of the compensation awarded by the jury shall be assessed upon the owners or occupants of the land deemed to be benefited, and that thereupon they shall, by resolution, fix and determine the district benefited, and specify the amount to be assessed upon the owners or occupants of the taxable real estate therein, etc., is not unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law, for its failure to provide for a notice of the hearing relating to the establishment of the assessment district, and the amount of the total assessment.—Voigt v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 547, affirmed in 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337.

¶ 672. Under the rule in Voigt v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 547, Comp. L. 1897, § 3406, is not unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law, by reason of its failure to provide for a notice of the hearing relating to the establishment of an assessment district, and the amount of the total assessment.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 559, affirmed in 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

¶ 673. Comp. Laws 1897, § 3406, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6231, relating to assessments for city improvements, is not invalid under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal constitution as not requiring the amount imposed upon the district to be limited to the amount of special benefit, since, as construed by the Supreme Court, the amount of taxes which can be assessed upon the district or upon any given parcel of land cannot exceed the benefits.—Voigt v. City of Detroit, 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; affirming 123 Mich. 547.

¶ 674. The due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal constitution is not violated by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3394, 3395 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 6219, 6220), because no provision is made for notice of the taking of land for street improvement purposes to those against whom the assessments for benefits will be taxed, notice to the person whose property is taken being all that is necessary.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; affirming 123 Mich. 559.

¶ 675. A resolution of a common council of a city passed in pursuance to Comp. L. 1897, § 3406, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6231, that such council fixes and determines that a specified district is benefited by the opening of a certain street and that there be assessed and levied upon the several pieces and parcels of real estate, included in the description, a certain amount in proportion, as near as may be, to the advantage which each lot or parcel is deemed to acquire by this improvement, does not offend the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution because not expressly stating that the property included therein is benefited to the amount ordered to be assessed, since by section 3406 when the proceedings reach such a stage that it becomes necessary to decide what proportion of the cost of the improvement shall be assessed to any given description of land an opportunity must be given the owner of the land to be heard on the question.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, affirming 123 Mich. 559.

¶ 676. A statute (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 217, chap. 3, §§ 6-8) cannot be held to provide for the taking of property without due process of law merely because it does not give one who is assessed for a drain but whose land is not taken for such drain the right to contest the public necessity for the drain.—Roberts v. Smith, 115 Mich. 5.

¶ 677. Comp. L. 1897, § 4353, providing for the appointment of a board to review drain assessments as between townships, is not invalid in that it does not provide for notice to the townships not appealing to such board as the act contemplates that the county drain commissioner who is required to be notified, will look after the interests of such townships and notify them if necessary. —Scholtz v. Ely, 123 Mich. 541.

¶ 678. Local Acts 1895, No. 443, which provides that assessments for public improvements heretofore made by the city of Grand Rapids against certain named railroads shall be legal demands against the railroad companies and enforceable by action in assumpsit and levy and sale upon execution, is invalid since taxes which are not a personal liability when assessed and levied cannot be made so by subsequent legislation. —City of Grand Rapids v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 130 Mich. 238.

§ 156. Food, health and employment regulations.

¶ 679. Public Acts 1901, No. 22, which prohibits the coloring of oleomargarine to resemble butter does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution nor Michigan Constitution, Art. VI, § 32.—People v. Rotter, 131 Mich. 250; People v. Phillips, 131 Mich. 395; People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

¶ 680. Act No. 104, Pub. Acts 1909, providing that common carrier railroads are liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the company, its officers, agents or employees, and that contributory negligence does not bar recovery if the negligence of the one injured is of less degree than that of the company, and that contracts of employment, etc., are no defense to actions for injuries, does not violate the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution nor the State Constitution, Art. 2, § 16, which prohibit depriving any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 681. Act No. 104, § 4, Pub. Acts 1909, providing that contracts of employment, etc., with common carrier railroads are no defense to actions for injuries, does not abridge the right to freely enter into contracts.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 682. Act No. 285, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that women shall not be employed in factories, mills, etc., to exceed an average of nine hours a day or fifty-four hours a week, nor for more than ten hours in any one day, except those engaged in preserving perishable goods. Held, this act does not abridge the right of contract so as to contravene the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.—Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419.

§ 157. Regulations of public use of ways or waters.

¶ 683. Laws 1879, Act No. 219, requiring any plank road company to remove its toll-gate beyond municipal limits, is invalid as taking property without due process of law where the effect thereof would be to deprive the company of a substantial part of the road upon which it collected toll.—City of Detroit v. Detroit & Howell Plank Road Co., 43 Mich. 140.

¶ 684. The exaction of tolls under a statute for the use of an improved waterway is not a deprivation of property within the meaning of the provision that no state shall deprive one of property without due process of law.—Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; affirming 53 Mich. 593.

§ 158. Motor vehicle laws and regulations.

¶ 685. Const., Art. VI, § 32, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, is not violated by an ordinance requiring motor vehicles to be registered and numbered and to display the numbers assigned to them.—People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 671.

¶ 686. Act 318, P. A. 1909, sec. 10, subd. 3, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2496, providing that owners of motor vehicles shall be liable for injuries occasioned by the negligent operation thereof by any person except in case such vehicle shall have been stolen is unconstitutional.—Barry v. Metzger Motor Car Co., 175 Mich. 466.

¶ 687. The infirmity of the provision of Act 318, P. A. 1909, subd. 3, § 10, that owners of motor vehicles are liable for injuries caused by the negligent operation thereof by any person except by one who has stolen such vehicle which is unconstitutional under Art. 2, § 16, of the State Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution relating to the taking of property without due process of law would have been cured had it been followed by language indicating that the owner should not be liable if the vehicle was taken in violation of Act 33, P. A. 1909, which makes it a felony to take or use motor vehicles without authority "without intent to steal the same."—Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371.

§ 159. Regulation of railroads.

Railroad taxation and assessments, see ante § 152.

Employers' liability laws, see ante § 156.

¶ 688. The due process of law clause of the Federal Constitution was not violated by the Railroad Commission Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530, providing that every common carrier operating within the state shall receive and transport at reasonable rates all car load traffic offered for transportation under the usual conditions locally consigned between points in the same city or town and shall receive and transport at reasonable rates from any junction point or transfer point or intersection with another railroad in such city or town all such car load freight destined to team tracks or other sidings on any line operated by the delivering carrier and shall deliver such cars upon such team tracks or sidings in the city or town, where such cars are received from any such connecting line when required so to do, since a service calling for the use of the so-called terminal facilities of a connecting railroad does not lose what would otherwise be the quality of transportation from the mere fact either that the movement begins or ends within the switching, or corporate limits of a city, or that the transportation is only between an intra-city junction and a team track or sidetrack, and, whether a given service is delivery as incidental to and as a part of a transportation in which the delivering carrier has substantially participated, or is a delivery incidental only to "transportation" which has been wholly performed by another carrier, is, at the last, a question of fact, to be determined in each case, as it may arise.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 198 Fed. 1009; affirmed in 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

¶ 689. Under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, § 7 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530), relating to the establishment of switch connections between railroads, and providing that every common carrier operating within the state shall receive and transport at reasonable rates any carload traffic offered for transportation under the usual conditions, locally consigned between points in the same city and town, and shall receive and transport at reasonable rates from any junction point or transfer point or intersection with another railroad in such city or town any and all such carload freight destined to team tracks or other sidings on any line operated by the delivering carrier, and shall deliver such car or cars upon such team tracks, or sidings in the city or town where such car or cars are received from such connecting line, when required so to do, a railway company being operated in the city of Detroit, may be required by the Railroad Commission, without violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, to use its tracks within the corporate limits, including team tracks, for the interchange of intrastate traffic, such required use not constituting the use of terminal facilities.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; affirming 198 Fed. 1009.

¶ 690. A steam railroad, which is required by an order of the Michigan Railroad Commission, pursuant to Pub. Acts 1907, No. 312, § 7, providing for the connection of the railroad tracks at a certain town with a competing interurban railroad, and the interchange of cars, carload shipments, and less than carload shipments, is not deprived of its property without due process of law within the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, where such order does not require the steam railroad to haul cars to points on the interurban railroad, but only to permit them to be hauled by the latter, nor by the provision requiring delivery of the cars to the interurban railroad, nor on the ground that there is no provision made for the paramount needs of the steam railroad for the use of its own equipment, nor for the prompt return or adjustment for loss or damage to such equipment nor for compensation for the use thereof, where such order, reasonably construed, does not exclude the ordinary remedies for delay in returning cars or for loss or damage to them and it does not contemplate that the steam railroad shall be required to permit the use of its cars, or of the cars of other railroads for which it is responsible, off its line without compensation.—Michigan Central R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 615, 59 L. ed. 750, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; affirming 168 Mich. 230.

¶ 691. The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution is not invocable where an order of the Michigan Railroad Commission directing a railroad company to relay rails removed by it from a part of a logging spur and to resume service thereon is enforced by mandamus, although a proceeding in equity to review such order is pending in the circuit court, the petitioner being required to furnish an adequate bond to indemnify the railroad company from possible loss, in case the order of the commission is vacated.—Detroit & Mackinac R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 240 U. S. 564, 60 L. ed. 564, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; affirming 178 Mich. 230.

¶ 692. A street railroad company was not deprived of its property without due process of law by an order of the railroad commissioner under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 171, § 5 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6868), requiring it to pay a portion of the expense of constructing and operating safety appliances at a grade crossing of a steam railroad, although such latter railroad was built across the street after the street railroad had built its tracks in the street and had occupied them, and especially where it appeared that the crossing was one of unusual danger.—Detroit, Fort W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 189 U. S.

§ 160. ——Regulating railroad fares.

¶ 693. Public Acts 1891, No. 90, requiring railroad companies to keep for sale at specified prices less than the maximum rates previously fixed by the legislature for the carriage of passengers, 1,000-mile tickets valid for two years, and to be issued, whenever required, in the name of the purchaser, his wife and children, cannot be sustained as an exercise of the power of the legislature to fix maximum rates of fare, or to make reasonable regulations for the convenience of the public concerning the conduct of railroad business; and it is void as violating that part of the federal constitution which forbids the taking of property without due process of law.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; reversing Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 694. How. St., § 3323, subd. 9, which fixes a maximum charge for the transportation of passengers on the different railroads of the state upon the basis of their gross earnings per mile, and which in so doing distinguishes between railroads located in the upper peninsula and those in the lower peninsula, does not contravene U. S. Const., amend. 14, which declares that no state shall deprive any person of his property without due process of law, or deny him the equal protection of its laws.—Wellman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 83 Mich. 592; affirmed 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400.

¶ 695. The amendment of 1889 to the Railway Act fixing the rate of fare on railroads whose passenger trains earn more than $2,000 per mile, at 2½ cents per mile, is not unconstitutional as applied to companies organized under the act to take over railroads sold on foreclosure of mortgages antedating such amendment; since the right to reorganize under the act is a privilege and not a property right and accepting the privilege of incorporating carries with it the burden of submitting to all the provisions of the act.—Commissioner of Railroads v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 130 Mich. 248; affirmed in 193 U. S. 17, 48 L. ed. 598, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310.

§ 161. Regulations of business or occupation generally.

¶ 696. Laws 1893, Act No. 148, making it unlawful for barbers to carry on their business on Sunday does not conflict with U. S. Const., amend. 14.—People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151.

¶ 697. Laws 1883, Act No. 167, regulating the practice of medicine by forbidding practice by persons without stated qualifications, unless for five years they have practiced in Michigan, does not deprive other persons of any liberty without due process of law.—People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

¶ 698. Due process of law, as accorded by the Federal Constitution, is not denied an applicant for a certificate of registration for the practice of medicine by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., on the ground that the board of registration is given authority to exercise judicial powers without any appeal from its decision, because it may refuse a certificate of registration if it finds that no sufficient proof was presented that the applicant had been "legally registered" under Pub. Acts 1883, No. 167, since a state may legally grant to a tribunal, whether called a court or a board of registration, the final determination of a legal question and a review of proceedings of the board may be had in the courts, although the act does not specifically so provide.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

¶ 699. Public Acts 1899, No. 237, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., relating to the determination of qualifications of persons to practice medicine and the issuance of certificates of registration to applicants, does not deprive an applicant of due process of law on the ground that it deprives him of the benefit of a hearing and because there is no provision in the statute for notice, or hearing, or authority to summon witnesses, or to compel them to testify, since the statute fixes the time and place of the meeting of the board semi-annually, and if applicant had applied at any meeting for a hearing the board would have been compelled to grant it, and if, on his hearing, his offer of or demand for testimony had been refused, the action of the board would have been subject to review by the courts.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

§ 162. ——Of insurance.

¶ 700. Comp. L. 1897, § 5180, providing that no policy of fire insurance shall hereafter be declared void for breach of conditions where such breach did not contribute to the loss, is not unconstitutional as interfering with the right of contract; the insurance companies are creatures of statute and the legislature has power to prescribe their contracts and to limit forfeitures for causes which are not in fact injurious to the companies.—McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 636.

¶ 701. Comp. L. 1897, § 5183, prohibiting the insured from being regarded as a co-insurer is not invalid as imposing an unconstitutional limitation upon the right to make contracts. The power to make a standard form of policy for use in the state of Michigan involves the power to make all of the terms of the policy.—Attorney General ex rel. Michigan Lubricator Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 148 Mich. 566.

§ 163. ——Bulk Sales Act.

Viewed as class legislation, see post § 217.
As denial of equal protection, see post § 225.

¶ 702. Public Acts 1905, No. 223, relating to the sale in bulk of stocks of merchandise, is within the police power of the legislature for the regulation of the manner of the use or disposition of property, and does not violate Const., art. VI, § 32, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. —Spurr v. Travis, 145 Mich. 721.

¶ 703. The Bulk Sales Act, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2612 et seq.), providing that the sale, transfer or assignment in bulk, of any part of a stock of goods otherwise than in the ordinary course of business shall be void as to creditors unless a full and detailed inventory of the stock is made out at least five days before the sale and unless the seller, transferee or assignee demand and receive a written list of creditors with their addresses and the amount of the debt owing to each, and unless the purchaser, transferee and assignee shall at least five days before taking possession notify personally or by registered mail every creditor whose name is contained in the list of the proposed sale, is not repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, as wanting in due process of law and denying the equal protection of the laws. —Kidd, Dater & Price Co. v. Musselman Grocery Co., 217 U. S. 461, 54 L. ed. 839, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; affirming 151 Mich. 478.

§ 164. ——Blue Sky Law.

As a police measure, see ante § 110.
As denial of equal protection, see post § 226.

¶ 704. The due process of law clause of the Federal Constitution is violated by the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of domestic and foreign investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, since the statute has no real or substantial relation to the public welfare, affecting only a private business.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.
[Note. See Compilers' annotation to Comp. L. 1915, ¶ 11945, as bearing on this point. —Editor.]

§ 165. Laws affecting corporations and associations.

Blue Sky Law, see ante § 164.
Vested rights in charter or franchise, see post § 245.
Power under provision for alteration or amendment of charters, see post § 289.
Irrepealable franchises as subject to police regulations fixing liability for wrongs, see also Franchises.

¶ 705. The reserved right to amend the charter of a corporation will not authorize the legislature to add requirements that would be inconsistent with constitutional principles, as by depriving it of its property without due process of law.—City of Detroit v. Detroit & Howell Plank Road Co., 43 Mich. 140.

¶ 706. An act repealing the charter of a corporation engaged in the municipal water supply, is not unconstitutional upon the ground that it deprives the company of its property without due process of law.—People ex rel. Ellis v. Calder, 153 Mich. 724, affirmed in 218 U. S. 591, 54 L. ed. 1163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122.

¶ 707. Comp. L. 1897, § 9551, providing for preferences for wage claims is unconstitutional because it makes no provision and provides no due process of law for determining a question of insolvency and preference between the parties interested.—Fisher v. Wineman, 125 Mich. 642.

¶ 708. Public Acts 1903, No. 232, § 12, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 9543, imposing penalties and liabilities on directors of mercantile and manufacturing companies is not invalid as in contravention of the "due process" clause.—Reuter Hub & Spoke Co. v. Hicks, 181 Mich. 250.

¶ 709. Since section 12 of Act 232, Pub. Acts 1903, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 9543, imposing penalties and liabilities on directors of manufacturing and mercantile corporations for failure to make annual reports to the secretary of state, is applicable to all corporations and directors of a class, and does not impose such penalties and liabilities until the directors have had their day in court, it does not contravene the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.—Reuter Hub & Spoke Co. v. Hicks, 181 Mich. 250.

¶ 710. How. St., p. 3397, chap. 124a (Laws 1889, Act No. 162), which provides for the winding up in chancery of mining and manufacturing corporations the charters of which have expired, is not unconstitutional because it does not make all stockholders necessary parties to the proceedings, and omits to make sufficient provision for notice to them. The proceedings are in behalf of all stockholders, and the statute contemplates that the general powers of the court may be exercised, when required, to supplement the statutory procedure.—Brown v. Pontiac Mining Co., 105 Mich. 653.

¶ 711. Where a limited partnership association is organized under Comp. Laws 1915, § 7950 et seq., including § 4, providing that no transferee of any interest in the association shall be entitled thereafter to any participation in the subsequent business of the association, unless he or she be elected thereto and any change of ownership, whether by sale or otherwise, which shall not be followed by election to the association, shall entitle the owner only to his interest in the association at a price and upon terms to be mutually agreed upon, and "in default of such agreement the price and terms shall be fixed by an appraiser appointed by the circuit court of the county where such association has its principal office, subject to the approval of such court," no question of due process of law or constitutionality of the act is involved, in a proceeding to have an appraiser appointed to appraise stock, although such act does not provide the machinery or mode of procedure, since the details of procedure may be left to a court without invalidating the statute.—Goodspeed v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 199 Mich. 273.

§ 166. Stockholders' or membership liability proceedings.

Imposing liabilities on directors, see ante § 165.
Laws impairing contract by adding liability, see post § 183, ¶ 792.
Retroactive remedies, see also post § 237, ¶ 1017.

¶ 712. The statute under which mutual fire insurance companies are formed provides (Laws of 1873, Act No. 82, § 15) for notice by publication where the insurance commissioner files a petition to wind up a company's affairs and to appoint a receiver. Held, that the act is not invalid because it makes no provision for the service of notice to the members of the company.—Wardle v. Cummings, 86 Mich. 395.

¶ 713. How. St., § 2366, which provides that, upon the return unsatisfied of an execution issued against the property or effects of a limited partnership association, an execution may issue against any of the members of the association to the extent of the portions of their subscriptions, respectively, in the capital of the association not then paid up, is not in conflict with the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 234.

¶ 714. In proceedings against members of a partnership association the entry of a motion based upon the files and records in the case, and upon an affidavit setting forth the organization of the association, the rendition of the judgment, the issue of the execution, its return unsatisfied, the amount of the capital stock of the association, the amount paid in by each member, and the amount remaining unpaid, together with service upon the association and each of its members of a copy of said motion and affidavit, with notice of hearing, constituted "due process of law."—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 104 Mich. 234.

§ 167. Fishing and game laws.

¶ 715. Laws 1889, Act No. 111, § 5, protecting fish and regulating fishing, is not open to the objection that in prohibiting fishing with nets it makes less valuable, by depriving him of the right to fish, respondent's land abutting on a lake, and his nets and paraphernalia used in fishing, and that the statute thus deprives him of his property without due process of law.—People v. Brooks, 101 Mich. 98.

¶ 716. Public Acts 1893, No. 110, authorizing the state fish warden to seize all nets "found in use in violation of the law," and providing that all fish or nets seized shall be disposed of in such manner as may be directed by the court before which the offense is tried, and that the warden shall not be liable in damages for the seizure or destruction of nets "in accordance with the provisions of this act," separates the seizure and destruction; and so is not a deprivation of property without due process of law, since the statute only gives a right to seize as a valid exercise of police power where the property is in unlawful use and the act also requires a judicial determination of illegal use before the property can be destroyed.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

§ 168. Liquor laws and regulations.

See also post ¶ 850.
Authorizing arrest without warrant, see also ante ¶ 617.

¶ 717. The "search and seizure clause" in the prohibitory liquor law of 1855 gave no opportunity to the party accused to defend his property; required no notice to him, and provided no means by which he was to be informed when, where and before whom the search warrant was to be returned. It was therefore unconstitutional.—Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125.

¶ 718. No one possesses a natural, inalienable or constitutional right to keep a saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 198.

¶ 719. The provision of Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 7, directing officers to close places of sale of liquors on their own determination of the fact of nonpayment of tax, and failure to display the proper card is invalid, as lacking due process of law.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549; People v. Brown, 85 Mich. 119.

¶ 720. The right to contract a debt or other personal obligation is included in the right to liberty; and, consequently, the provision in Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 8, that a dealer in liquor shall not become surety upon a liquor dealer's bond, is unconstitutional.—Kuhn v. Common Council of Detroit, 70 Mich. 534.

¶ 721. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 31, requiring that curtains, screens, etc., obstructing the view from the street, etc., must be removed during the times when places of sale of liquor must be kept closed, does not infringe U. S. Const., amend. 14, providing that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.—Robison v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38.

¶ 722. Laws 1887, Act No. 31, providing that it shall not be lawful to maintain a saloon or other place of entertainment in which intoxicating liquors are sold, etc., within one mile of the Soldiers' Home, does not conflict with Const., art. 6, § 32, which declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; and this is so although said act operates to prohibit sales of liquors in buildings erected and occupied for such purposes before said home was established or said act passed.—Whitney v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 71 Mich. 284.

¶ 723. Section 3, Act No. 507, Local Acts 1907, regulating the liquor traffic of municipalities in Cheboygan county, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it permits the council to unjustly discriminate against one and deprive him of the right to engage in the liquor business, without a hearing.—Quay v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 150 Mich. 457.

¶ 724. The Michigan Local Option Law of 1889, making it unlawful to manufacture or sell malt, vinous, spirituous, or intoxicating liquors in any county where a majority of the electors vote in favor of prohibition, is not unconstitutional as depriving breweries of their property without due process of law because making no provision for the sale of liquor on hand at the time the law became operative.—Eberle v. Michigan, 232 U. S. 700; 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; affirming 167 Mich. 477.

¶ 725. A brewing company owned property which was greatly depreciated in value by the passage of the Local Option Law forbidding the manufacture of liquors, and the adoption of said law in the county in which the property of the brewery was located. Held, the Local Option Law (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889 as amended) was not unconstitutional on the ground of taking property without due process of law, since such depreciation in the value of the property was one of the risks attached to the liquor business.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477, affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 726. Act No. 381, Pub. Acts 1913, regulating and prohibiting sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors, is not in conflict with Art. II, § 16, of the Constitution.—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

¶ 727. The fact that the proprietor of a saloon is criminally liable under § 5392, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5068, for sales of liquor made in his absence and without his knowledge by his agent to a student attending an institution of learning, does not render the act repugnant to § 1, Art. XIV of the Federal Constitution.—People v. Damm, 183 Mich. 554.

¶ 728. Act No. 381, Pub. Acts 1913, regulating and prohibiting the sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors, is not contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

§ 169. ——Civil Damage Act.

¶ 729. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 20, providing for the recovery, by the father or mother of a minor to whom intoxicating liquors are sold, of both actual and exemplary damages not less than fifty dollars in each case, against the seller, is not open to the objection that in authorizing the recovery of a fixed sum without evidence of actual damages it takes property without due process of law. It may be assumed that a sale of intoxicants to a minor son necessarily injures a parent informed thereof.—Cramer v. Danielson, 99 Mich. 531.

¶ 730. Laws 1871, Act No. 196, amending the act prohibiting the liquor traffic (Comp. L. 1871, ch. 69), and giving to such as are injured on account of the intoxication of others a right of action against dealers, is held valid.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 Mich. 496.

¶ 732. A judgment is not a contract within the constitutional inhibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts.—Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56.

¶ 733. An exemption from taxation granted to railroads building roads in certain territory (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 174; Pub. Acts 1873, No. 129) is a mere gratuity, bounty, or privilege, and such a statute does not create a contract.—Manistee & N. E. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Railroads, 118 Mich. 349.

¶ 734. By the Train Railway Act, § 22 (How. St., § 3516) it was provided that each company organized thereunder should pay to the state one-half of one per cent on its capital stock in lieu of all other taxes; and section 34 of the same act (How. St., § 3525) provided that the act might at any time be amended or repealed, but that such amendment, etc., should not alter the corporate rights of companies formed under it. Held, Laws 1882, Act No. 6, repealing How. St., § 3516, and leaving the companies to be taxed under the general laws, was valid.—City of Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co., 76 Mich. 421; Detroit City St. R. Co. v. Guthard, 51 Mich. 180.

¶ 735. There was an impairment of the contract obligations of the Detroit United Railway, a street railroad company in the City of Detroit, in violation of § 10 of Art. I of the Federal Constitution, which company succeeded by purchase under Comp. L. 1897, § 6448, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6997, to lines operated originally in the city and its suburbs under independent franchises which authorized certain fares, and united them under one organization, where the Supreme Court places such a construction on the ordinance of January 3, 1889, granting the Detroit City Railway, one of the predecessors of the street railroad company, the right to extend its easterly terminus to the city limits and finding that the city lines should be operated as a whole and certain reduced fares charged, and acts of the legislature annexing suburban territory to the city (Acts of June 16, 1905, and June 19, 1907) as to make the provision of the ordinance as to reduced fares applicable to all territory within the city, including such extensions. Detroit United Ry. v. Michigan, 242 U. S. 238, 61 L. ed. 268, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87; reversing 162 Mich. 460 and 173 Mich. 314.

¶ 736. Section 9 of the Act of February 13, 1855 (Laws of 1855, p. 305), providing that a certain railroad company should, on or before the first day of July, pay the state treasurer an annual tax of 1 per cent on the capital stock of said company paid in lieu of other taxes paid in, except for penalties imposed upon said company by its act of incorporation, or any other law of the state, created a contract between the state and the corporation, based upon sufficient consideration, which prevented the subjection of the property of the corporation to any other than the tax prescribed in the statute.—Powers v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 201 U. S. 543, 50 L. Ed. 860, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556; affirming 138 Fed. 264.

¶ 737. An irrevocable contract, supported by a consideration, was not made by the enactment of the Act of May 27, 1893, § 3, which, after levying a specific tax on railroads, provided "that the rate of taxation fixed by this act or any other law of this state shall not apply to any railway company hereafter building and operating a line of railroad within this state north of parallel forty-four of latitude until the same has been operated for the full period of ten years, unless the gross earnings shall equal $4,000 per mile," etc., regardless of the fact that a road was built and operated in reliance upon the act.—Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 48 L. Ed. 229, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107.

¶ 738. The provision of an act exempting specified lands of a railroad company from local taxation for a period of three years was not a contract where there was no consideration, the company not being required to give anything in return; it was the promise of a gratuity spontaneously made, which might be kept, changed or recalled at pleasure.—Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. (89 U. S.) 527, 22 L. ed. 805.

¶ 739. A statute exempting from taxation property employed in a certain manufacture, when made by way of bounty to encourage such manufacture, does not constitute a contract, and may be repealed at any time, though it is unrestricted in duration by its terms.—East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 259, affirmed 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 373, 20 L. ed. 611.

¶ 740. The Act of February 15, 1859, a general law, providing in effect that all corporations and individuals who shall manufacture salt in Michigan from water obtained by boring shall be exempt from taxation as to all property used for that purpose and, after they have produced 5,000 bushels of salt, they shall receive a bounty of ten cents per bushel, is a bounty law and not a contract, except to bestow the promised bounty upon those who earn it as long as the law remains unrepealed.—East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. City of East Saginaw, 13 Walk, (80 U. S.) 373, 20 L. ed. 611, affirming 19 Mich. 259.

¶ 741. Local Acts of 1893, No. 415, which imposes upon landowners adjoining the boulevard in Detroit the expense of constructing sidewalks, is not invalid as impairing the obligation of an implied contract between them and the city, exempting them from such expense, where the statute (Local Acts of 1889, No. 388), under which the boulevard was opened and is maintained, contains no agreement or obligation on the city's part to construct sidewalks.—Turner v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 326.

¶ 742. The constitutional provision is not infringed by a law declaring contract void on ground of public policy, which would have been so without such law.—McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454.

¶ 743. Local Acts 1905, No. 612, providing for locating and establishing drains in Ionia county, and that it shall not apply in any case where a contract shall have been let for the construction of a drain or any part of it, does not impair the obligation of any contract; since the drain commissioner has no such contractual relations under the law that his duty may not at any time be suspended, restricted or enlarged, and persons interested in the construction of drains have also no such rights.—Rice v. Ionia Probate Judge, 141 Mich. 692.

§ 172. ——Corporate franchises and charters.

Street railway franchise as contract with city inalterable without consent, see also Street Railways, I.

¶ 744. Charters of municipal corporations are subject to the general legislation of the state; they are not contracts, and are amendable at the pleasure of the legislature.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495; City of Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84.

¶ 745. The charter of a banking corporation is a contract; and if it contain no reservation of a power to repeal, its repeal is a violation of the constitution of the United States.—Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225.

¶ 746. The charter of a private corporation is a law, and something more, in that it contains stipulations which are terms of compact between the state and the corporation, and which neither party may disregard or repudiate; they are as much removed from the modifying and controlling power of legislation as would be contracts between two private parties.—Flint & F. Plank Road Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 99.

¶ 747. Where the essential elements of a contract do not appear in a statute granting a franchise, the courts will not be astute in discovering contract obligations therein for the purpose of defeating later statutes on the same subject, but will solve all doubts in favor of the state.—City of Detroit v. Detroit & Howell Plank Road Co., 43 Mich. 140.

¶ 748. The Plank Road Act of 1848 (How. St., § 3566 et seq.) empowers companies organized thereunder to build and maintain toll gates where they deem necessary. Held, that the amendment of 1879 (How. St., § 3596) to said act, prohibiting the maintaining, except with consent of the local authorities, of toll gates within the limits of any city or village, is void as impairing the obligation of contracts, and does not prevent a company from erecting a gate within the limits of a village where none had previously existed.—Highland Park v. Detroit & B. P. R. Co., 95 Mich. 489.

¶ 749. The acceptance and user by a public service corporation of a franchise created by Act No. 264, Pub. Acts 1905, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2941, in the streets of a municipality, create a contract between the company and the state which the latter cannot subsequently impair or destroy by recalling the grant.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

¶ 750. The power reserved to the legislature by § 1, Art. XV, of the Constitution of 1850, to amend, alter or repeal laws pertaining to corporations, does not permit it to impair franchises acquired under Act No. 264, Pub. Acts 1905, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2941, where large sums of money have been expended in reliance thereon.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

¶ 751. The exercise by a mining company of the power to purchase stock in other mining companies, given by the 1905 amendment to the Mining Act, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 105, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 7800, does not violate the contract between the stockholders of the purchaser, as expressed in their articles of incorporation, which do not in terms include such power, since the power to make such amendment was given by Constitution, art. 15, § 1, providing for the formation of corporations under the general laws, and that "all laws passed pursuant to this section may be amended, altered or repealed," and the stockholders are as much bound by such provision as if it had been contained in their articles of incorporation.—Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 167 Fed. 721, affirming 167 Fed. 704.

¶ 752. Public Acts 1873, No. 198, making provision for the creation of a new corporation upon the reorganization of a railroad by the purchasers at a mortgage foreclosure sale, did not constitute a contract protected by the Constitution of the United States, and the right therein conferred upon purchasers to reorganize and become a new corporation was subject to the laws of the state existing or in force at the time of such reorganization regulating rates, and enacted subsequent to the giving of such mortgage.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 193 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 598, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310; affirming 130 Mich. 248.

¶ 753. The power reserved in Mich. Const. 1850, art. 15, § 1, to the legislature to alter, amend or repeal future acts of incorporation authorized the legislature to enact a statute (Pub. Acts 1885, p. 116) permitting each stockholder of a corporation to cumulate his votes upon any one or more candidates for directors, and hence such statute is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract.—Looker v. Maynard ex rel. Dusenbury, 179 U. S. 46, 45 L. Ed. 79, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; affirming 111 Mich. 498.

¶ 754. The directors of a corporation, in making a contract or incurring a debt, contracted subject, not paramount to the proviso for the repeal of the charter, under Laws 1849, Act No. 223, § 11, providing that the legislature may, at any time thereafter, amend or repeal the act.—Calder v. Attorney General ex rel. Ellis, 218 U. S. 591, 54 L. ed. 1163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122; affirming 153 Mich. 724.

¶ 755. A judgment ousting the directors of a water company engaged in supplying a city with water under a charter giving the legislature the right to repeal it at any time is proper, where an act (Local Acts 1905, No. 492) is passed repealing the charter and providing for compensation for the property, except the franchise, or for the removal of the property by the company, at its election, even though the effect of the enforcement of the statute may be to destroy the franchise, which with the other property has been mortgaged, and has not been paid for.—Calder v. Attorney General ex rel. Ellis, 218 U. S. 591, 54 L. ed. 1163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122; affirming 153 Mich. 724.

¶ 756. The graded railroad fare law of 1889 (How. St., § 3323, subd. 9) does not violate the obligation of any contract between the state and a railroad company organized subsequently to the adoption of Const., art. 19a, § 1.—Wellman v. Chicago & G. R. R. Co., 83 Mich. 592; affirmed 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400.

¶ 757. The state has the power to make a valid contract with a railroad company whereby it is authorized to fix its own rates and an attempt by the legislature to fix tolls where the power has been clearly given to a corporation is a violation of a contract under the provision of the Federal Constitution.—Pingree v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 118 Mich. 314.

§ 173. ——Contracts with state.

Corporate charters and franchises, see ante § 172.
Subjection to police power, see post § 175.
Effect of statute taking away suability of state officers as contracting parties, see post § 180.
Vested right to earned payments, see post § 241.

¶ 758. The rule that an agreement, not based upon a consideration, is a nude pact revocable at pleasure, applies where one of the parties is a state.—Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. (89 U. S.) 527, 22 L. Ed. 805.

¶ 759. Where an act of a state legislature would impair a contract obligation existing between the state and the general government it is void, and cannot be given effect by a subsequent release from the contract obligation.—Fenn v. Kinsey, 45 Mich. 440.

¶ 760. Laws 1877, Act No. 132, confirming the transfer by the governor and board of control of railroads, to the Port Huron & Lake Michigan Railroad Company, of lands granted by congress to the state in aid of the construction of railroads, and at first assigned to the Detroit & Milwaukee Railway Company, was void as impairing the contract obligation arising from the conditions of the grant, whereby the lands were to revert to the general government if the roads to which the state assigned them were not completed within a specified time.—Fenn v. Kinsey, 45 Mich. 446.

¶ 761. Local Acts 1901, No. 315, creating a new school district out of the territory of existing districts and giving to it the property of the old districts within its limits, is not invalid as impairing the obligation of contracts since the districts did not hold the property under contract with the state but as a public agency.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639; affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

¶ 762. Local Acts 1901, No. 315, providing for the alteration of certain school districts by taking territory from such school districts and adding it to another school district, does not impair any contract of the school districts with the legislature of the state, since the existence of a school district is not based on any contract.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; affirming 131 Mich. 639.

¶ 763. The fact that a township has acted under an act giving to townships the right to adopt a township system for the building and maintaining roads and for raising funds to pay therefor, does not render a subsequent act repealing it, void under U. S. Const., art. 1, sec. 10, and Mich. Const., art. 4, sec. 43, prohibiting the impairment of contracts, since such provision has no application to legislation affecting townships.—Saginaw Co. Sup'rs v. Hubinger, 137 Mich. 72.

¶ 764. The act of a board of supervisors in fixing the salary of a prosecuting attorney does not constitute a contract between the latter and the county; and where the constitution does not prevent, the legislature can authorize the board to change the salary so far as it has not already been earned, even though a part of the official duties are duties to the state.—Knappen v. Barry County Supervisors, 46 Mich. 22.

§ 174. Pre-existing and subsequent contracts.

¶ 765. A statute affecting the rights of parties cannot apply to existing contracts, but so far as regards the method and form of suing it may apply as well to existing as to future contracts.—Waldron v. Harring, 28 Mich. 493.

¶ 766. Comp. L. 1897, § 5180, providing that no policy of fire insurance shall hereafter be declared void for breach of conditions where such breach did not contribute to the loss is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contract where it applied only to contracts made subsequently to the passage of the act.—McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 636.

§ 175. Impairment by exercise of the police power.

By liquor laws, see post § 177.
By other regulative laws, see also post §§ 178-184.

¶ 767. A law passed in pursuance of the police power of the state is not unconstitutional because operating to prevent the performance of a contract previously made.—People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330.

¶ 768. The police power of a municipality cannot be abridged, bargained away, or impaired by contract.—Petz v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 169; City of Detroit v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 95 Mich. 456.

¶ 769. A plank road company's charter, although not alterable until after thirty years, is, even during that time, subject to reasonable and proper police regulations enacted to preserve the lives and health of the people.—Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank Road Co., 69 Mich. 616.

¶ 770. State contracts may be subjected to the police power.—Robertson v. State Land Office Commissioner, 44 Mich. 274.

§ 176. Laws amounting to impairment in general.

See also post §§ 177-184.

¶ 771. The statute requiring a new promise to be in writing, in order to revive a debt barred by the statute of limitations, does not violate the obligation of contracts.—Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 378.

¶ 772. The constitution leaves the opinions of the Supreme Court free for publication by any person. By act 168 of 1879 the publication of the Supreme Court reports was let by contract, and the act provided that the secretary of state should hold the copyright. The legislature of 1881 enacted that the judges should file head-notes with the opinions. Held, that as the opinions are excluded from copyright, and the head-notes would be the only remaining feature of the reports worth copyrighting, the act would impair the obligations of the contract with the publishers and is therefore unconstitutional and void.—In re Head Notes, 43 Mich. 641.

¶ 773. A bank, being indebted to the state, conveyed certain property to the state as security, by an agreement with the commissioners appointed by the state to settle with the bank, upon the express condition that the state should indemnify the bank against certain liabilities. The legislature of the state passed a statute accepting and sanctioning the agreement of the commissioners except the condition to indemnify the bank. Held, that the state had no power to accept the conveyance and reject the condition, and that such exception in the statute was unconstitutional and void.—Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225; Michigan State Bank v. Hammond, 1 D. 527.

§ 177. ——Liquor laws.

¶ 774. An act prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is not unconstitutional because operating to prevent the performance of a contract previously made.—People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330.

§ 178. ——Tax and assessment laws.

Corporation tax laws as contracts, see also ante § 171.
Remedial tax laws, see also post § 179.
Changing time for redemption from sale, see post § 182.

¶ 775. A statute that should seek to limit the taxing power of a city so as to preclude it from raising an amount necessary to satisfy its pre-existing legal obligations, would be void as impairing the obligation of contracts.—Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 628.

¶ 776. An act imposing a special tax upon a corporation whose charter is silent as to taxation is not a law violating the obligation of a contract.—People v. Detroit & P. R. R., 1 Mich. 458.

¶ 777. The provision in the tax law of 1891 authorizing the mortgagor to pay the tax against the mortgage interest in case of the mortgagor's default, and deduct same from amount owing on mortgage, does not impair the obligation of the contract between mortgagor and mortgagee that the former shall pay the tax.—Common Council of Detroit v. Board of Assessors of Detroit, 91 Mich. 78.

¶ 778. The imposition of taxes upon bondholders and other creditors of a specially chartered railroad corporation, under Pub. Acts 1911, No. 95, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1989 et seq., impairs the obligation of the contract between the company and its bondholders and other creditors whereby it has contracted to pay such bondholders and creditors not only the principal of the amount of indebtedness due them, but also certain stipulated interest, and to require it to deduct from the principal or interest payable to them the amount of such taxes is to interfere between it and its bondholders and other creditors, especially in view of the fact that "the power to tax is the power to destroy."—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Fuller, 205 Fed. 86.

¶ 779. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 95, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1989 et seq., providing for the imposition of certain specific taxes on the stock, bonds and other indebtedness of specially chartered railroad companies, does not impair the obligation of the contract as to taxation contained in the railroad company's charter, since the tax is not on the company itself, as is provided by the charter, but is upon bondholders, stockholders and other creditors.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Fuller, 205 Fed. 86.

§ 179. ——Regulation or change of remedies.

Taking away remedy or capacity to be sued, see post § 180.
Execution and redemption laws, see post §§ 181, 182.
Imposing statutory liabilities, see post § 183.
Denying enforceability, see post § 184.

¶ 780. Statutes that affect or alter the remedy only, without touching rights secured by the contract, are not prohibited.—Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68; Cargill v. Power, 1 Mich. 369.

¶ 781. The provision in the tax law of 1858 authorizing proceedings before a circuit court commissioner to test the validity of tax titles plainly purports to act on rights and not on remedies, and is therefore absolutely void.—Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12.

¶ 782. The Act of 1839 (see How. St., § 8750), abolishing imprisonment for debt, operated upon the remedy to enforce contracts before it took effect, and, thus construed, did not impair the obligation of contracts.—Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38.

¶ 783. How. St., § 8016a, which authorizes the commencement of suit by attachment before the debt matures, does not conflict with Const., art. 4, § 43, inasmuch as it does not impair the obligation of contracts.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 503.

§ 180. ——Taking away remedy or suability.

¶ 784. The Act of 1843 (How. St., § 7847), prohibiting mortgagees from bringing ejectment before foreclosure is unconstitutional and void as to mortgages previously executed. It does not affect the remedy merely, but takes away the right to the rents and profits, which constitute a part of the mortgage security.—Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68; Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 11 Mich. 252; Todd v. Davis, 32 Mich. 160.

¶ 785. The Assignment Law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l), violates the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts, since it deprives creditors of their remedies.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 786. A contract for installing a heating plant was made with the Board of Control of the State Public School while Comp. L. 1897, § 2021, providing that such board might sue and be sued, was in force. This power was taken from the board by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 143. Held, that such statute did not impair the obligation of the contract and hence could be set up in abatement of the action brought against such board.—Wheeler v. Board of Control of State Public School, 137 Mich. 291.

§ 181. ——Affecting executions and enforcement by sale.

¶ 787. The provision of the Act of 1841 (Sess. L. 1841, p. 45, §§ 1, 2) prohibiting the sale of property on execution unless it would bring two-thirds of its value as appraised by three disinterested freeholders, so far as it applied to the remedy to enforce pre-existing contracts, was unconstitutional and void. —Willard v. Longstreet, 2 D. 172.

¶ 788. A law increasing exemptions from execution affects the remedy only, and is not unconstitutional as applied to pre-existing debts.—Rockwell v. Hubbell's Adm'rs, 2 D. 197; Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 Mich. 217.

§ 182. ——Redemption laws.

¶ 789. The law allowing a certain time for redemption after foreclosure of a mortgage under the power of sale is a part of the contract; and a legislative act shortening the time is unconstitutional as to mortgages in existence at the time the act is passed.—Cargill v. Power, 1 Mich. 369.

¶ 790. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 60, which has the effect of hastening the time of sale and of shortening the period of redemption as to lands previously assessed does not violate the provision of the federal constitution that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts; proceedings for collecting taxes are essentially in invitum, and do not presuppose the existence of any contract relation.—Muirhead v. Sands, 111 Mich. 487.

¶ 791. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 200, amending the foreclosure act so as to shorten the time within which sale may be ordered, and adding the right of redemption after the sale, simply applies to the remedy and does not impair the obligation of the contract created by a mortgage executed prior to the passing of the act.—State Savings Bank v. Matthews, 123 Mich. 56.

§ 183. ——Imposing new or different liabilities.

¶ 792. The provision in the General Banking Law of 1887 (Laws 1887, Act No. 205, § 46), rendering personally liable the stockholders of existing banks does not impair pre-existing contracts between the stockholders and the corporation; under the reservation of power in Const., art. 15, § 1, to the effect that all laws providing for the formation of corporations under general laws may be amended, etc., it is competent to provide by subsequent legislation that as to future contracts of the corporation its stockholders shall be subject to a further liability.—Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472.

§ 184. ——Forbidding contract or denying enforcement.

¶ 793. The constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of a contract is not infringed by declaring a contract already made void on the ground of public policy. —McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454.

VII. FREEDOM OF WORSHIP, SPEECH AND PRESS.

§ 185. Religious liberty in general.

Operation of provision excluding religious tests for competency of witnesses, see Witnesses, II, VI, A.

Freedom of worship and conscience, see Const., Art. II, § 3.

Provision as to competency as witness, see Const., Art. II, § 17.

¶ 794. Religious liberty does not cover purposes or methods that are unlawful in themselves, or that interfere with another's liberty of action or violate peace and good order. —In re Frazee's Case, 63 Mich. 396.

¶ 795. Comp. L. 1897, § 5912, prohibiting the playing of baseball on Sundays is not unconstitutional on the ground of infringing upon religious freedom.—Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311.

¶ 796. The action of a board of education in permitting the use of a book in the public schools known as "Readings from the Bible," made up of moral precepts enforcing the Ten Commandments, no instruction being given from the said book, and no note or comment by teachers being allowed, is not in violation of Const., art. 4, § 39, providing the legislature shall not pass any law preventing a person from worshipping according to the dictates of his own conscience, or to compel any person to pay taxes to support religions. —Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560.

¶ 797. The action of a board of education in permitting the use of a book in the public schools known as "Readings from the Bible," made up of moral precepts enforcing the Ten Comandments, no instruction being given from the said book, and no note or comment by teachers being allowed is not in violation of Const., Art. 4, § 41, providing that the legislature shall not diminish or enlarge civil or political rights on account of opinions or beliefs concerning matters of religion.— Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of Detroit, 118 Mich. 560.

§ 186. Freedom of speech and of the press.

Freedom of speech and liberty of the press, see Const., art. II, § 4.

Provisions as to justification by truth in libel, see Const., art. II, § 18.

¶ 798. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 109, § 14, forbidding contributions for nomination and election expenses by corporations, is not violative of the Constitution, Art. II, § 4, providing that every "person may freely speak, write or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of such right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," as such section applies only to natural persons.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

VIII. CIVIL PROCEDURE AND RIGHT TO JUSTICE.

Style and name in which process runs, see Process.

Citation to officer on charges as "process" within constitution, see Officers, V.

§ 187. Legislative power over procedure.

Legislation affecting procedure is usually questioned for constitutionality either because it encroaches on the judiciary (see ante II, B), or because it also involves property rights or liberties and denies due process (see ante, V), or because it operates through the remedy to impair the obligation of contract (see ante, VI), or is unequal or discriminating (see post, X), or because the statute was improperly enacted (see Statutes, I-IV). It is also questioned less frequently as offending some one of the guaranties, like that of jury trial (see post § 192) and others, which see in their appropriate places.

Class legislation, see post X.

Power of legislature to change or affect courts under the constitution, or their jurisdiction and functions, see ante §§ 51-65.

Power over prerogative writs and revisory jurisdiction, see ante § 55.

Legislation on remedies and procedure under the due process clause, see ante V.

Limitation laws as due process, see ante § 146.

Legislation affecting rights in existing remedies or granting remedies as impairing obligation of contract, see ante § 179-184.

Invalidity of federal law requiring stamps on state process, see ante ¶ 542.

¶ 799. The right to have equity controversies dealt with by equitable methods is as sacred as the right of trial by jury.—Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 800. The power of the legislature to prescribe rules of evidence being undoubted, it had the power to say that the deeding by a person in debt of all his property subject to execution, to another who had no visible property, should be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent intent (Pub. Acts 1897, No. 99).—Crane v. Waldron, 133 Mich. 73.

¶ 801. Pub. Acts 1901, Act No. 239, relating to the exclusion of the testimony of the agent of a defendant, where the plaintiff has died, is constitutional.—Wood v. Kaufman, 135 Mich. 5. [Note. It does not appear in the opinion what particular clause of the constitution was invoked.—Editor.]

¶ 802. The legislature has the power to permit recovery for a tort in an action in form ex contractu.—Mintz v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 280.

¶ 803. Comp. L. 1897, § 10423-10425, providing that the jury in rendering a verdict shall designate the amounts respectively awarded for injuries to feelings and for other damages is not unconstitutional, as it does not attempt to deprive the plaintiff of any common-law right of action for slander or libel.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

§ 188. ——Penalties and increased damages.

¶ 804. The legislature has power to provide for the recovery of treble damages by one who, having obtained judgment of restitution, brings trespass or case for damages. No constitutional provision is invaded.—Lane v. Ruhl, 103 Mich. 38, 42.

¶ 805. It is competent for the legislature to provide for doubling damages when injuries are inflicted by dogs.—Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675; writ of error dismissed in 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

§ 189. Denial of justice or remedy.

Right to sue or defend, see Const., Art. II, § 12.

¶ 806. A denial of jurisdiction to enforce, by judicial remedy, rights that depend upon the performance of executive duties, is not, in legal effect, a denial of all remedy; a party applying for action, which under the constitution and laws depends on the executive discretion, or is to be determined by the executive judgment, must submit to the decision. The presumption is as conclusive in favor of executive as of judicial action.—People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320.

§ 190. Grant or denial of rights of action.

As invading vested rights, see post §§ 241-248.

Protection of existing actions and rights on adoption of constitution, see Const. Schedule, § 2.

¶ 807. Actio personalis moritur cum persona is not a constitutional maxim, and the legislature can give the representative of one who has been killed by negligent injury the right to sue therefor.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

¶ 808. The statute (How. St., §§ 8107-8109) which authorizes proceedings at law in the nature of a judgment creditor's bill, does not, in so far as it provides for the examination of a judgment debtor, and a discovery of his assets, conflict with any provision of the constitution; and it is harmonious with the provision for the abolishment of unnecessary distinctions between law and equity.—Lee v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 406; Berles v. Comstock, 104 Mich. 129; Grand Rapids Savings Bank v. Widdicomb, 114 Mich. 689.

¶ 809. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 25, § 1, providing for suit against an unincorporated voluntary association in its own name is not unconstitutional as authorizing suit to be maintained against nothing, no recognizable entity.—United States Heater Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, 129 Mich. 354.

§ 191. Grant or denial of review by courts.

See also post ¶ 1077.

In criminal cases, see post § 206.

Constitutional right respecting appeal, see also Appeal, § 1.

Statutory nature of right to appeal or to have review, see Appeal, § 1.

¶ 810. The right to appeal from one tribunal to another is a statutory, not a constitutional, right.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 811. The legislature may deny the right of appeal to certain courts created by it and grant such right to other courts; it may deny appeals from the judgments of the Detroit police court and permit them in other parts of the state.—Sullivan v. Haug, 82 Mich. 548.

¶ 812. The right of appeal from justice's court is not constitutional, but is subject to legislative control.—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654.

¶ 813. The statute limiting the absolute right of appeal from justices' judgments in Detroit to cases where the amount involved is not less than fifty dollars, is valid; since Const., art. 6, § 18, only defines jurisdiction "with such exceptions and restrictions as may be provided by law."—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654.

¶ 814. As the remedy by information is not, and as the remedy by the old writ of quo warranto was not, a matter of right at common law, the legislature has power to leave cities to determine the title of their own officers without further review.—People ex rel. Dafoe v. Harshaw, 60 Mich. 200.

¶ 815. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, § 3, subd. 6, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 191, providing that the board of registration may at its discretion revoke a physician's certificate for publication of certain advertisements, is not unconstitutional because no method of judicial review of the action of the board is provided; since if the statute is observed no constitutional right will have been infringed and if not observed the courts will afford relief without any provision for appeal.—Kennedy v. State Board of Registration in Medicine, 145 Mich. 241.

§ 192. Jury trials and juries.

Jury as part of "court," see also ante ¶ 280.

Jury trial as part of due process, see also ante § 131.

Class exemptions from jury service, see post § 222.

In criminal cases, see post §§ 209, 210.

Operation of provision making jury judges of the law, see Instructions, I; Trial, VI; Indictment, IX; Libel, VIII.

Provision as to jury trial, see Const., art. II, § 13.

Provision for jury of less than twelve, see Const., Art. V, § 27.

¶ 816. A claimant in possession of lands is entitled to have his right thereto tried by jury, and it is not competent to give the adverse claimant a remedy in equity which would exclude jury trial.—Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 322.

¶ 817. Laws 1887, No. 260, p. 337, extending the jurisdiction of the court of equity to quiet titles to cases where the lands are unoccupied, is not unconstitutional as depriving a defendant in a suit to quiet title of the right to trial by jury, secured by Const., art. 6, § 27, since such constitutional provision extends only to cases where, by the common-law, a trial by jury was customary.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Sparrow, 36 Fed. 210.

¶ 818. A statute undertaking to place exclusive jurisdiction in a court of equity so as to deprive one claiming property wrongfully taken of a jury trial would be unconstitutional.—Edwards v. Symons, 65 Mich. 348.

¶ 819. Legislative permission to log-driving companies to assume control of and sell logs of non-assenting owners, held to contravene right of jury trial.—Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139.

¶ 820. The Assignment Law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l) is unconstitutional as violating the provision which secures the right of trial by jury, since it looks to a summary disposition of cases which necessarily turn on questions of fact.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 821. Since proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act are not criminal in nature, the intervention of a jury is unnecessary, and the statute is not repugnant to Const., art. 6, § 28.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

¶ 822. The right of trial by jury involves the indefeasible right to be tried by a jury of the vicinage; and therefore Comp. L. 1871, ch. 256 (How. St., § 9409) is unconstitutional in so far as it authorizes persons charged with trespasses on state lands to be tried in some other county than that where the offense was committed.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 823. The right to trial by a jury of the vicinage does not inhibit the legislature, in creating a new county out of territory taken from two old ones, to enact that suits, including those of a local nature, pending on a certain date in any court in either of the old counties shall be prosecuted to final judgment in the county where commenced. So held in an ejectment case for land in the new county.—Spalding v. Kelly, 66 Mich. 693.

¶ 824. How. St., § 466, providing that, on the trial of an action in which a county is interested, the electors and inhabitants of such county shall be competent jurors, is not invalid as attempting to deprive a party of his constitutional right to a trial by an impartial jury, since the interest of such persons as taxpayers is so remote that it may be presumed to be incapable of influencing their conduct.—Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270.

¶ 825. Comp. L. 1897, § 10504, giving the Supreme Court power to review decisions of the lower court, does not violate the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury though it gives power to set aside the verdict of the jury because against the weight and preponderance of the evidence, since the court does not undertake to enter a verdict but only to submit the matter to another jury.—Hintz v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 132 Mich. 305.

¶ 826. Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 215, § 17, chap. 25, providing for a trial by jury in the circuit court upon appeal from justice court in street condemnation proceedings, contemplates a trial de novo and is unconstitutional in that it does not provide for a jury of freeholders from the vicinage as required by the constitution in the matter of the taking of private property for public uses; circuit court jurors being merely required to have the qualifications of electors.—City of Mt. Clemens v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 293.

§ 193. Imprisonment for debt.

Invalidity as taking away jury trial, see ante ¶ 821.

Causes and grounds for arrest on capias or as fraudulent debtor, see Civil Arrest, I-III.

Provision as to nonimprisonment for debt, see Const., Art. II, § 20.

¶ 827. Imprisonment for a wrongful act in no way dependent on contract is not unconstitutional.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 828. That part of Comp. L. 1857, chap. 117, § 19, How. St., § 6832, which authorizes the issuing of a warrant in an action on contract, on the ground solely of the nonresidence of defendant, is in violation of Const., art. 6, § 33, forbidding imprisonment for debt, except, etc.—Chappee v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 53.

¶ 829. The Fraudulent Debtors' Act (How. St., ch. 304), is not in conflict with Const., art. 6, § 33, prohibiting imprisonment for debt founded upon contract, inasmuch as the constitutional provision expressly excepts cases of fraud and the act conforms.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

¶ 830. Imprisonment on an execution in replevin is not prohibited by Const., art. 6, § 33, or Comp. L. 1857, chap. 166.—Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204.

¶ 831. Under the constitutional prohibition of imprisonment for debt, a defendant in a divorce cause cannot be imprisoned, except as for contempt, for failing to comply with an order directing him to pay over to the complainant a sum of money awarded as temporary alimony, and for expenses of the suit.—Steller v. Steller, 25 Mich. 159.

¶ 832. A cause of action based simply on a breach of promise to marry, without any charge involving fraud, is within the constitutional provision forbidding imprisonment for debt.—In re Tyson, 32 Mich. 262.

¶ 833. Although there can be no imprisonment for debt for breach of promise to marry involving no fraud alleged and proved, it is otherwise where seduction under promise of marriage is alleged.—In re Sheahan, 25 Mich. 145; Badger v. Reade, 39 Mich. 771.

¶ 834. The failure of an agent, not being an attorney-at-law, to pay over money collected by him for another, is not "misconduct or neglect in a professional employment" within the meaning of the Act of 1839, § 2,

How. St., § 8751, which states the exceptions to the abolishment of imprisonment for debt.—Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38.

§ 194. ——Contempt or ne exeat proceedings.

See also ante ¶ 831.

¶ 835. The Assignment Law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-87491) violates the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt, in that it allows a circuit judge to issue the writ of ne exeat at discretion.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 836. The provisions of the constitution (art. 6, § 33) and of Comp. L. 1897, § 9553, prohibiting imprisonment for debt do not prohibit contempt proceedings to enforce a decree in chancery being excepted by Comp. L. 1897, § 9554, which provides that the proceedings of the previous section shall not extend to contempt proceedings to enforce civil remedies.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 837. The imprisonment under Comp. L. 1915, § 13765, of an executor refusing to obey an order of the probate judge for the payment of money to the executor of another estate is not imprisonment for debt nor for contempt within the state Constitution, art. II, § 20, providing that no person shall be imprisoned for debt arising out of, or founded on, a contract, express or implied except in cases of fraud, or breach of trust, or of moneys collected by public officers or in any professional employment.—In re Merrill, 200 Mich. 244.

St., § 9177, is valid in enacting that any person who shall feloniously steal the property of another in any other of the United States, and shall bring the same into Michigan, shall be guilty of larceny here and punished accordingly.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 839. Whether Comp. L. 1857, § 5797, How. St., § 9177, is constitutional in providing for such punishment where the larceny was committed in a foreign country, quære; the court being equally divided.—Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

§ 196. Criminal proceedings within the constitution.

Essentials of due process in criminal cases, see ante §§ 143, 144.

Criminal procedure in general, including application by the court of the rights of accused under the constitution, see Indictment and Prosecution.

¶ 840. The Fraudulent Debtors' Act (How. St., ch. 304) does not contravene Const., art. 6, § 28, guaranteeing to the accused in every criminal prosecution certain rights for the action that said statute provides for is a civil and not a criminal proceeding.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

Eastman, 101 Mich. 419.

§ 198. Accusation and knowledge of same.

Requisites and sufficiency of indictments or informations, see Indictment, I.

Provisions as to information as to nature of accusation, see Const., Art II, § 19.

¶ 842. Const., art. 6, § 28, requiring the accused in every criminal prosecution "to be informed of the nature of the accusation," is based upon a presumption of innocence, and on a theory that an innocent man may be indicted as well as a guilty one, and may not be able to prepare for trial without knowing what he is to meet.—People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431.

¶ 843. It was not meant to preclude the legislature from so altering the common-law form of charging an offense as to dispense with mere formal description and unsubstantial particularity. But they can authorize no form of indictment that shall not give the offender fair notice of the particular offense to be proved, and an opportunity to procure his testimony in defense, that he may not be taken by surprise on the trial.—Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232.

¶ 844. The search and seizure clause of the Liquor Law of 1855, which makes no provision for informing the owner of the liquors of the nature of the accusation against him on which the seizure and condemnation is made, is unconstitutional for that reason. —Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125.

¶ 845. How. St., § 9421, providing that, under an information charging the embezzlement of money only, a conviction may be had for the embezzlement of any check, draft, bill of exchange, etc., does not violate the constitutional right of the respondent to be informed of the nature of the accusation against him, since he may in such case have the charge made certain by examination or by bill of particulars.—People v. Hanaw, 107 Mich. 337.

¶ 846. Laws 1887, Act 153 (How. St., § 9314c), which provides that to an information charging rape upon a female child under fourteen years of age there may be added a count charging respondent with having taken liberties, etc., without committing, or intending to commit, the crime of rape, is valid.—People v. Goulette, 82 Mich. 36.

§ 199. Public and speedy trial; confrontation.

Acts or rulings of court infringing right to public trial, see Indictment, IX, A.
Operation of provision guaranteeing speedy trial, see Indictment, II, VI, IX, A.
Production and confrontation of witnesses, see Indictment, IX, B.
Use of depositions in criminal cases as denial of right to confront witnesses, see Indictment, IX, B.
Provision as to speedy trial, see Const., art. II, § 19.

¶ 847. Local Acts of 1893, No. 408, § 18, authorizing the judge of the recorder's court of Detroit to exclude from the court room, upon the trial of any cause wherein evidence of licentious, lascivious, degrading, or peculiarly immoral acts will probably be given, all persons except those necessarily in attendance, is unconstitutional as applied to a criminal case, in that it violates the right of the accused to a public trial.—People v. Yeager, 113 Mich. 228.

§ 200. Right to counsel and witnesses.

Provision as to counsel and process for witnesses, see Const., art. II, § 19.

¶ 848. One who is not upon trial, but who is merely subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury, cannot take exception to his not having the assistance of counsel when interrogated.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

§ 201. Privilege against self incrimination.

Questions impairing privilege, and application of the privilege, see Examination of Witnesses, IV.
Admissibility of self criminating testimony when given or answer made, see Indictment, VIII, B.
Exclusion of unfavorable inferences or comment from fact of claiming privilege, see Indictment, VIII, A, IX, C.
Immunity of witnesses from prosecution on testimony previously given by them, see Witnesses, I.
Privilege against self crimination on accounting suit, see also Accounting Suits, ¶ 29.
Provision against being witness against self, see Const., art. II, § 16.

¶ 849. The privilege against self crimination (Const., art. VI, § 32) is not violated by an ordinance requiring motor vehicles to be registered and to display the numbers assigned to them.—People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 671.

¶ 850. The provision of the amended Local Option Act (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183), requiring druggists to report to the prosecuting attorney of the county sales of liquor, is not in violation of Const., art. 6, § 32, providing that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case nor be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process.—People v. Henwood, 123 Mich. 317.

¶ 851. The Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 183) in force in Eaton county requiring druggists to make weekly reports of sales of liquor to the prosecuting attorney, is not violative of Const., art. 6, § 32, as compelling a party to be a witness against himself.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

§ 202. Punishments and fines.

Double punishment, see post § 205.
Denials of equal protection, see post § 224, ¶ 956.
Ex post facto laws, see post § 233.

Imprisonment for debt, see ante § 193.
Propriety or excessiveness of the fine imposed or sentence given, see Crimes, I, E; Indictment, XI.
Provision as to excessive fines and cruel and inhuman punishments, see Const., art. II, § 15.

¶ 852. Laws of 1881, Act No. 159, How. St., §§ 1987-1994, providing that justices of the peace may commit disorderly persons to the Ionia Reformatory from other counties is invalid, the practical effect of it being to confine the convict for an indefinite period, and away from the court to which he must apply, and so to prevent him from giving the proper recognizance.—In re Fowler, 49 Mich. 234.

¶ 853. Upon the legislature alone is conferred the power to fix the minimum and maximum of the punishment for all crimes; and the penalties fixed for violation of the so-called Local Option Law (How. St., § 2283b5) are not excessive fines or cruel or unusual punishments.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 854. Where the punishment prescribed by statute for crime committed by a convict confined in prison is the same as if the crime had been committed outside the prison walls, it is not cruel or unusual.—People v. Huntley, 112 Mich. 569.

¶ 855. The Fraudulent Debtors' Act (How. St., ch. 304) does not contravene Const., art. 6, § 31, prohibiting the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment; for under section 11 of the act the debtor may secure his release from imprisonment by paying the debt, by giving security for its payment, by assigning his property and obtaining a discharge under How. St., ch. 306, or by giving security that he will obtain such discharge.—Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481.

¶ 856. How. St., § 9180, which imposes a severer penalty for horse-stealing than is imposed under other statutes for larceny of property of the same value, is not unconstitutional as inflicting a cruel and unusual punishment (Const., art 6, § 31) since it is not so disproportionate to the offense as to shock the moral sense of the people.—People v. Morris, 80 Mich. 634.

¶ 857. How. St., § 9142, providing a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment for receiving stolen property, cannot be regarded as imposing a "cruel and unusual punishment," even though the maximum penalty for larceny of the same property is imprisonment for only one year.—People v. Smith, 94 Mich. 644.

¶ 858. The provision of the Liquor Law (Laws 1887, Act No. 313) to the effect that a druggist, upon failure to keep a public record of purchasers and purposes of purchase, in any single instance, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100, and not more than $500, and imprisonment for not less than ninety days, nor more than one year, and, for a second offense, shall be debarred from selling liquor for five years, violates Const., art. 6, § 31, relating to cruel and unusual punishments so far as the disability to do business is concerned.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 859. The provision of Laws 1887, Act No. 313, to the effect that one who has furnished bond and paid tax shall, upon any violation of the law, in addition to the penalties for such violation, forfeit the tax paid, and be debarred from continuing business or from becoming surety on any bond under the act for one year, is obnoxious to the constitution as imposing unusual punishment.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 860. Act No. 64, Public Acts of 1907, defining the crime of burglary with high explosives and providing a minimum sentence of fifteen years as punishment therefor, is not unconstitutional as providing a punishment unusual and cruel and disproportionate to the offense.—People v. Mire, 173 Mich. 357.

¶ 861. Comp. L. 1897, § 11653, which provides that any person negligently or wilfully permitting fire to escape from his premises to those of another to the injury of such other person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall also be liable to the party injured in double the amount of damages sustained, is not unconstitutional as inflicting unusual punishment; since the statute seeks to prevent the negligent use of a dangerous element.—Allen v. Bainbridge, 145 Mich. 366.

§ 203. ——Excessive fines.

¶ 862. Any fine or penalty is excessive, within the prohibition of Const., art. 6, § 31, if it seriously impairs the capacity of gaining a business livelihood.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 863. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 200, which fails to fix a maximum penalty for the violation of the statute, is not repugnant to Const., art. 6, § 31, prohibiting the imposition of excessive fines, but is to be read in connection with the constitutional provision; and the power of the court that imposes sentence is limited thereby.—In re Yell, 107 Mich. 228.

¶ 864. Any fine or forfeiture is "excessive" which has not some limitation of value, and any punishment is "unusual" which forfeits any civil rights. So held of the disabilities imposed by the Liquor Law of 1887 (Laws 1887, Act No. 313) in regard to transacting business and receiving credit as a surety.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 865. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, is constitutional in so far as it imposes upon druggists a punishment by a fine of from $100 to $500 and imprisonment from ninety days to one year for sale of liquors to be used as a beverage, though another section was invalid.—Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

§ 204. ——Indeterminate sentences.

Effect of amendment of the constitution to make legislative action permissible, see also ante § 33.

Effect of indeterminate sentence laws to confuse distinct functions of government, see ante II, A, B.

Ex post facto operation and validity, see post § 233.

¶ 866. Const., art. 4, § 47, providing that the legislature may provide for indeterminate sentences expressly authorizes an indeterminate sentence law such as Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, and by the adoption of this amendment the people so changed their fundamental law as to do away with constitutional objections which had been found insurmountable by the Supreme Court.—In re Manaca, 146 Mich. 697.

§ 205. Double jeopardy or punishment for same offense.

What constitutes jeopardy or former bar, see Crimes, I, D.

Operation of provision against double jeopardy as rule in second prosecution or trial, see Crimes, I, D.

Double jeopardy clause, see Const., art. II, § 14.

¶ 867. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 118, § 64, which provides punishment for crime committed by a convict confined in prison, is not rendered invalid—as providing a second punishment for a single offense—by the fact that the warden of the prison may by section 40 of the same act punish convicts for misconduct, said section 40 being designed merely to aid the authorities in maintaining discipline, and not to provide a punishment for crime.—People v. Huntley, 112 Mich. 569.

¶ 868. Comp. Laws, § 5395, relating to saloons kept open in violation of law, declaring persons violating any of its provisions guilty of a breach of the peace, and providing that the punishment therein prescribed shall be in excess of all other punishment provided for violation of the section, is repugnant to the constitutional provision that no person shall twice be put in jeopardy for the same offense. (Per Brooke, J.; Montgomery, Hooker and McAlvay, JJ., concurring; Blair, C. J., Ostrander and Montgomery, JJ., concurring in the result; Grant, J., dissenting.)—Gowan v. Smith, 157 Mich. 443.

§ 206. Right to appeal or review.

In civil cases, see ante § 191.

Application of constitutional provisions in favor of liberty on writ of error without previous objection, see Indictment, XVI.

¶ 869. No person has a constitutional right, after having been duly convicted before a court of competent jurisdiction, to an appeal to another tribunal; neither is there an inherent right of appeal from a judgment of an inferior court to a court of superior jurisdiction for the purpose of securing a second trial upon the merits.—Sullivan v. Haug, 82 Mich. 548.

¶ 870. How. St., § 6591h, limiting the right of appeal in criminal cases determined in the police court of Detroit to cases where the sentence of imprisonment exceeds twenty days, or the fine imposed exceeds $25, is constitutional.—Sullivan v. Haug, 82 Mich. 548.

§ 207. Courts and jurisdiction.

Distinctions denying equal protection, see post § 224.

¶ 871. A city police court constituted with powers like those of justices of the peace in criminal cases cannot have its jurisdiction extended by statute so as to include all misdemeanors committed within the city, unless the statute furnishes the means indispensably requisite to the exercise of such enlarged power; that is, not unless it provides for preliminary examinations, for the lodging of indictments, the filing of informations, the separation of the functions of court and jury, and the securing generally, of the full right of trial by jury.—People v. Mangold, 71 Mich. 335.

§ 208. Grand jury.

¶ 872. It is within the power of the legislature to provide that a grand jury may be summoned from any portion of the county, either in an emergency or in the first instance.—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

§ 209. Juries and jury trial.

Denial of equal protection, see post § 224.

As to grand jury, see ante § 208.

In civil cases, see ante § 192.

Nature of the right to trial by jury under the constitution, see Jury, I.

Right to have general verdict in criminal cases, see Indictment, IX, G.

Jury provisions, see Const., art. II, §§ 13, 19.

¶ 873. The legislature cannot deprive one accused of crime of the right to a trial by jury.—Stephens v. People 38 Mich. 739.

¶ 874. The right being constitutional, no substantial change in its character can be made by the legislature.—Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 875. The constitutional right of jury trial requires substantial equality throughout the state in methods of prosecution.—People v. Mangold, 71 Mich. 335.

¶ 876. One of the substantial features of the right of trial by jury in criminal cases is the jury's right of giving a general verdict on the merits.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1.

¶ 877. Choosing jurymen is a matter of statutory regulation; and any mode of choosing them is constitutional that obtains good and lawful men of defendant's vicinage from the body of the county.—People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260.

¶ 878. Jurors in criminal action must be electors (How. St., §§ 7554, 7555) and live in the vicinage; but the legislature can prescribe other qualifications and change the mode of choosing them and the officer by whom and the lists from which they are chosen.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48.

¶ 879. The constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed by Laws 1881, Act No. 160 (How. St., §§ 7623-7630), which authorizes jurors to be drawn by a board of jury commissioners appointed by the governor.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48.

¶ 880. Under Const., art. 6, § 27, and art. 4, § 46, which provide respectively that "the right of trial by jury shall remain," and that "the legislature may authorize a trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men," How. St., § 7622, which provides for the continuance of a trial with less than twelve jurors if any of the jurors, after the impaneling, is unable to attend, is unconstitutional; for the legislature, though empowered to fix a certain definite number of less than twelve which shall constitute a jury, cannot provide for contingencies in which a jury may, in the discretion of the trial court, consist of less than twelve.—McRae v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co., 93 Mich. 399.

¶ 881. The determination of the status of the child and his commitment to the custody of a probation officer, or to the custody of the keeper of one of the industrial schools for the purpose of education and reformation, upon a verdict of a jury of six, provided for by the Wayne County Juvenile Court Act (Local Acts 1907, No. 684), is not such a criminal proceeding as would of itself make the act unconstitutional; but placing delinquent children on trial and imposing a fine of not to exceed twenty-five dollars with costs, etc., makes the proceeding criminal and renders the entire act unconstitutional within the meaning of section 28, art. 6 of the Constitution, providing for a trial by a jury of twelve men.—Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 151 Mich. 315.

§ 210. ——Place or vicinage.

¶ 882. Because of the constitutional right of one charged with crime to be tried by a jury of persons chosen from his vicinage, Comp. L. 1871, § 7605 (How. St., § 9176), which authorizes embezzlement by various public agents or by private agents under written instructions or agreements as to the disposal of property to be prosecuted in the county where the complainant's principal place of business may be, is unconstitutional so far as it authorizes prosecution outside of the county where the offense was committed.—Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

¶ 883. Comp. L. 1897, § 11633, providing that larceny in a railroad car may be prosecuted in any county through which the car passes, is invalid as in conflict with Const., art. VI, § 27, guaranteeing trial by jury.—People v. Brock, 149 Mich. 464.

¶ 884. Comp. L. 1897, § 2450, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 917, giving to organized or subsequently organized counties bordering on Lake Huron concurrent jurisdiction of all offenses committed on that part of the lake lying within the limits of the state, is not unconstitutional as depriving an offender of the right of trial by a jury of the vicinage, as the fixing of the boundaries of a vicinage is a legislative function.—Andrews v. Ellsworth, 190 Mich. 157.

§ 211. Unreasonable searches and seizures.

Due process in seizure and destruction of fishing nets, see ante § 167.

Due process in search for and seizure of liquors, see ante § 168.

Laws for search without making known what accusation is made, see ante § 198.

Operation of constitution and laws respecting searches and seizures, see Search and Seizure.

Statutory proceedings to require production of things or papers in evidence as search and seizure, see also Discovery, II.

Search and seizure clause, see Const., art. II, § 10.

¶ 885. The summary process of execution, authorized by Comp. L. 1871, § 1029, How. St., § 1064, for the collection of tax moneys from the township treasurer and his sureties, does not violate Const., art. 6, § 26, forbidding unreasonable searches and seizures; that prohibition does not refer to an open levy upon property under process having the apparent sanction of law.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

¶ 886. The provision of the amended Local Option Act (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183), requiring druggists to report sales of liquor to the prosecuting attorney of the county, is a valid police regulation not obnoxious to Const., art. 6, § 26, prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures.—People v. Henwood, 123 Mich. 317.

¶ 887. The Local Option Statute (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended) is not unconstitutional as providing for unreasonable searches and seizures.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477; affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 888. Const., art. VI, § 26, forbidding unreasonable searches is not violated by an ordinance requiring motor vehicles to be registered and to display the numbers assigned to them.—People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 671.

X. LOCAL, SPECIAL AND CLASS LEGISLATION; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS.

§ 212. Local and private legislation.

The general doctrine that statutes must, if possible, be general in their application (Const., art. V, §§ 30, 31) is fully treated in Statutes, II.

Necessity that laws establishing new courts be general in operation, see Statutes, II.

§ 213. Equality before the law.

Class legislation and discrimination, see post § 214 et seq.

Equal justice, see post § 223.

Equal protection clause under the Federal XIVth Amendment, see post § 224 et seq.

Inequality in representative districts, see post § 259.

Discrimination in private schools, see Civil Rights, ¶ 2.

Equality clause in state constitution, see Const., art. II, § 1, and see art. V, § 30, as to local and special acts.

¶ 889. The principle underlying all constitutions "that all men are equal before the law, and that life, liberty and property are secured to all alike" is no broader in its scope and effect than the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, and no law which can be sustained under such provisions of the Federal Constitution can be held, in those respects, to violate either the letter or the spirit of our State Constitution.—In re Fox's Estate, 154 Mich. 5.

§ 214. Class legislation and discrimination.

Equal protection of the laws (Federal XIVth Amendment), see post §§ 224-227.

Abridgment of privileges and immunities of citizens, see post §§ 228-231.

Differing degrees of punishment for similar crimes as cruel and unusual, see ante §§ 202-204.

Giving special classes of officers vacations and furloughs, see ante ¶ 388.

Discrimination in right to vote by registration laws, see post § 253.

Basis for classification, see post § 215.

Persons entitled to raise class question, see ante § 28.

Discrimination affecting interstate commerce adversely, see Commerce.

¶ 890. Class legislation is such as denies rights to one which are accorded to others, or inflicts upon one individual a more severe penalty than is imposed upon another in like case offending.—People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151.

¶ 891. Class legislation is unconstitutional only when shown to be unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious, and if reasonable and for a beneficial public purpose, it is constitutional.—Lundstrom v. Township of Ellsworth, 196 Mich. 502.

¶ 892. Legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose for the common good, is limited by reasonable and justifiable differentiation to a distinct class or type or class of persons is not for that reason unconstitutional, because class legislation, if germane to the object of the enactment and made uniform in its operation upon all persons of the class to which it naturally applies, but if it fails to include and affect alike all persons of the same class and extends immunities or privileges to one portion and denies them to others of like kind by unreasonable or arbitrary subclassification it comes within the constitutional prohibition against class legislation.—Haynes v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 201 Mich. 138.

¶ 893. No such underlying principle as that the legislature shall not enact laws for a particular locality different from those applicable to other portions of the state, or shall not suspend the operation of general laws as to any particular locality, has ever been recognized in this state.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 368.

¶ 894. It is not competent for the legislature to exempt one class of citizens from legal liability for wrongs for which other classes are liable, nor is it competent to authorize any person, natural or artificial, to do wrong to others without answering fully therefor.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Company, 72 Mich. 560.

§ 215. Basis for classification.

In taxation, see also post § 227.
Declination of courts to question wisdom of classification, see ante § 21.

¶ 895. The legislature has power to declare that certain acts committed in a particular locality shall constitute a criminal offense and be punished as a felony, although such acts, if committed in another locality or section of the state, would not be criminal acts at all.—People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611; see St. Ignace v. Snyder, 75 Mich. 649.

¶ 896. A general law is not unconstitutional because based upon the classification of school districts according to population. —MacQueen v. Huron City Commission, 194 Mich. 328.

¶ 897. The fact that Act No. 251, Public Acts 1913, pertaining to the election of members of school boards, applies only to cities having a population of 250.000 and upwards. does not render it unconstitutional.—Burton v Koch, 184 Mich. 250. (Brooke, C. J., and McAlvay, J., dissenting.)

¶ 898. Classification under a tax law is not arbitrary and invalid if it is based upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the attempted classification. —Michigan Telephone Cases, 185 Fed. 634; affirmed 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206, 33 Sup Ct. Rep. 833; 229 U. S. 335, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

¶ 899. There is basis for the classification of property taxed and that untaxed under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 49, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1955 et seq., providing for the assessment of property of telephone companies on the ad valorem basis, but exempting from taxation companies having receipts less than $500, where the property exempted is only a trifling portion of the whole, and it further appears that the cost of assessing and collecting in this class would be disproportionate to the amount realized; that this property is in the incipient or development stage, while the taxed property is in the fully developed form; that the use of the untaxed property is predominantly private, while the use of the taxed property is correspondingly public, and that the exempted property is used for the personal convenience and economy of the owners, while the taxed property represents commercial investments for profit-making purposes.—Michigan Telephone Cases, 185 Fed. 634; affirmed in 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206. 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; 229 U. S. 335, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

¶ 900. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 49, How. St., 2nd Ed. § 1955 et seq., providing for the assessment of property of telephone companies on the ad valorem basis, but exempting from taxation companies having receipts of less than $500, and affording a basis for classification resulting in the taxation of the public use, profit-bearing property, while exempting the private-use, co-operative property, may be sustained as to its classification, even though the practical application of the law results in the taxation of some small portion of the co-operative companies, and the exempting of some small portion of the profit-making companies, since, in classification for governmental purposes, there cannot be an exact exclusion or inclusion of persons or things.—Michigan Telephone Cases, 185 Fed. 634; affirmed in 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; 229 U. S. 335, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

§ 216. Validity of particular laws.

Due process in taxation, see ante §§ 152-155.

¶ 901. Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 198, as amended by Pub. Acts 1897, Act No. 118, relating to adulteration, was not rendered unconstitutional by the proviso "that nothing in this act shall prevent the coloring of pure butter."—People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

¶ 901a. The provision of Detroit Charter of 1883, chap. 4, § 13, reducing bribery to a misdemeanor when a city officer is bribed and providing a special procedure in the recorder's court, is invalid as making a local distinction in a general matter of state concern.—People ex rel. Robinson v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 902. The provision of the General Tax Law, § 127 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 107), that the former owner in possession of state tax homestead lands may be deprived of acquiring the right to redeem which his neighbor similarly situated on state tax lands does acquire does not render it unconstitutional; this discrimination has been authorized by the legislature.—Griffin v. Kennedy, 148 Mich. 583.

¶ 903. Pub. Acts of 1915, No. 81, providing that in all cities having full-paid members of fire departments, all officers and men receiving such pay shall be entitled without any deduction of pay to a leave of absence of one day of twenty-four hours off duty every four days and a furlough of twenty days once each year, is unconstitutional as constituting class legislation, as it applies only to a class of cities having only full-paid members of fire departments, all others, including those having only part-paid members of their fire departments, being omitted, and relates only to a particular class of employees in the cities to which it applies, confining its application only to such officers and men of the fire department as receive full pay.—Simpson v. Paddock, 195 Mich. 581.

¶ 904. The Wayne County Juvenile Court Act (Act No. 684, Local Acts of 1907) is objectionable as class legislation because it excepts children who are inmates of other institutions which are subject to the visitorial powers of the State Board of Corrections and Charities.—Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 151 Mich. 315.

¶ 905. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 34, relating to the sterilization of mentally defective persons maintained wholly or in part by public expense in public institutions in the state, is unconstitutional as constituting class legislation in that it carves a class out of a class, placing only those defective and incompetent persons under its provisions who are already under public restraint.—Haynes v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 201 Mich. 138.

¶ 906. Pub. Acts 1883, No. 39, as amended, providing for the organization of companies for the use of water of the St. Mary's river for the development of power, and conferring the privilege of a special tax, is not class legislation and therefore void, although such act is local in character; since it is a public act and it cannot be determined that it was passed in the sole interest of the particular company organized thereunder.—Attorney General ex rel. Beadle v. Arnott, 145 Mich. 416.

¶ 907. The charter of the city of Marquette, ch. 7, § 1, subd. 16 (Local Acts 1895, No. 409), providing that "the city shall never be liable for any damage sustained by any person in consequence of the neglect of any person to keep any such sidewalk clear from snow, ice, dirt, wood or other obstructions" is not invalid as being class legislation.—Maclam v. City of Marquette, 148 Mich. 480.

¶ 908. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 257, regulating the operation and construction of theaters and moving picture shows, and providing for inspection by the state fire marshal, and for the issuance of licenses is not obnoxious to the prohibition of local or special legislation.—Jeup v. State Fire Marshal, 182 Mich. 231.

§ 217. ——Trade and business regulations and laws.

Denials of equal protection, see post § 225.
Privileges and immunities affected by Bulk Sales Law, see post ¶ 984.

¶ 909. Laws 1893, Act No. 148, prohibiting the business of conducting a barber shop on Sunday under penalties more severe than those provided for the conduct of other legitimate business on that day is not class legislation.—People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151.

¶ 910. As the general insurance laws of this state contain no discrimination against non-residents, Laws 1893, Act No. 74, prohibiting the solicitation of insurance for any non-resident person, etc., without first obtaining the prescribed certificate of authority from the commissioner of insurance, is valid.—People v. Gay, 107 Mich. 422.

¶ 911. Comp. L. 1897, ch. 136, governing the licensing of peddlers is not unconstitutional as class legislation because section 22 thereof provides that farmers, manufacturers, mechanics or nurserymen may sell their own work or production by sample or otherwise without license, and that wholesale merchants may sell to dealers without license, since this provision treats all persons in the same class alike under like circumstances and conditions.—People v. DeBlaay, 137 Mich. 402.

¶ 912. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 251, requiring commission merchants engaged in selling farm products upon commission to give bond conditioned upon the faithful performance of the trust reposed in them, and to pay over to the proper parties the money coming to their hands, is invalid as class legislation and also as an unjustifiable interference with the right of citizens to carry on legitimate business.—People ex rel. Valentine v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 664.

¶ 913. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223, relating to the sale in bulk of stocks of merchandise, is not unconstitutional, as limited to a particular calling or relation; since it is well known that the business of retailing goods, wares and merchandise is conducted largely upon credit, and furnishes an opportunity for the commission of frauds upon creditors not usual in other classes of business.—Spurr v. Travis, 145 Mich. 721.

¶ 914. The apparent purpose of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223 (the Bulk Sales Act), to protect creditors is sufficient reason for not including within its provisions merchants who owe no debts.—Spurr v. Travis, 145 Mich. 721.

¶ 915. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 206 How. St., 2nd Ed., § 4909 et seq., forbidding merchants, or dealers in merchandise, from issuing trading stamps with an agreed redemption value to their customers as evidence of trade, unless redeemable by themselves, and making it a crime punishable by heavy fine and imprisonment for third parties to participate in the transaction by any arrangement to redeem them according to the terms under which they are issued, while manufacturers may freely issue them, either redeemable by themselves or any other person, is invalid as making discriminating classification.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 197 Mich. 532.

¶ 916. It is within the legislative power to provide (Laws 1887, Act No. 50, § 9), that payments of principal and interest and fines by borrowing stockholders of building and loan associations may be enforced against their securities on default without deducting premiums paid or interest thereon accrued.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

§ 218. ——Labor and service regulations.

¶ 917. The statute requiring emery wheels in continuous use to be provided with blowers to carry away the dust arising from their operation, is not open to the objection that it is class legislation, since all persons who are given continuous employment over dry wheels are within its provision.—People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527.

¶ 918. Act No. 285, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that women shall not be employed in factories, mills, etc., to exceed an average of nine hours a day or fifty-four hours a week, nor for more than ten hours in any one day, except those engaged in preserving perishable goods. Held, said statute is not unconstitutional as being class legislation.—Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419.

§ 219. ——Corporation laws.

Abridging privileges and immunities, see post § 230.

¶ 919. Laws 1887, Act No. 50, providing for the incorporation and regulation of building and loan associations is not such class legislation as to be unconstitutional.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 920. The fact that § 10 of Act No. 91, Public Acts 1911, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1988, does not apply equally to incorporated and private banks does not render it unconstitutional.—Bank of Tustin v. Township of Burdell, 184 Mich. 131.

¶ 921. How. St., § 3923a, which provides for the distribution among the patrons of log-running companies of surplus receipts after deducting therefrom actual and necessary expenses, as specified in said section, and a certain dividend to be paid stockholders, subject, however, to certain conditions and provisions therein set forth, is class legislation and unconstitutional.—Stimson v. Muskegon Booming Co., 100 Mich. 347.

¶ 922. Laws of 1877, Act No. 141 (How. St., §§ 4886-4889), providing for the enforcement of the individual liability of stockholders, is not rendered unconstitutional by the section which exempts claims for labor from its operation; said section does not make the statute class legislation.—Ripley v. Evans, 87 Mich. 217.

§ 220. ——Fish and game laws.

Privileges and immunities of citizens, see post § 288, ¶ 983.

¶ 923. An act regulating the catching of fish in the waters of the state is not void as class legislation because the closed season is shorter in the waters adjoining a particular county than elsewhere.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 924. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 151, impliedly allowing until 1900 the use of small mesh nets then owned, is not open to the objection that it discriminates during the interim years in favor of those fishermen who, at the time of the passage of the act, owned gill nets with a mesh of a less extension than that prescribed therein, since the presumption in favor of the constitutionality of legislation authorizes an interpretation that the term "lawful size," as used in the exception to section 2, forbidding possession of fish below a fixed weight unless caught in nets of "lawful size," means the size prescribed in the statute itself.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 925. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 151, fixing a lawful size mesh for gill nets, but allowing use until 1900 of smaller size meshes then owned and forbidding possession of fish of certain weight unless caught in "lawful size" nets, even if construed as allowing fishermen using the lawful size meshes to keep fish which others may not keep does not make the legislation discriminatory, since the use of gill nets of lawful size is open to all fishermen.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 926. No. 153, Pub. Acts 1907, makes it unlawful to use for the purpose of commercial fishing any kind of a boat, tug or launch without registering the same and taking out a license. Held, such act is not unconstitutional as discriminating against fishermen who use gasoline boats in favor of those using sailboats by reason of different license fees imposed by it on these classes of boats, since the statute applied to all citizens.—People v. Setunsky, 161 Mich. 624.

§ 221. ——Liquor Laws.

Unequal liquor taxes, see post § 227.
Abridgment of privileges and immunities, see post § 231.

¶ 927. How. St., § 2283d8, which provides that it shall not be lawful to allow a minor to remain where intoxicating liquors are sold, unless such minor is accompanied by his father or legal guardian, does not unconstitutionally discriminate against minors not so accompanied.—People v. Japinga, 115 Mich. 222.

¶ 928. The provision of the liquor law (Laws 1887, Act No. 313), which allows the local boards to refuse approval of the bond of any person "whose character and habits would render him an unfit person to conduct the business of selling liquor," is unconstitutional because it lays down no uniform standard, and allows the local boards to deprive any person of the right of selling on their private judgment as to his unfitness.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 929. The provision of How. St., § 2283d1, prohibiting a man's becoming surety on more than two liquor bonds, is constitutional, all persons being treated alike by the statute.—Wolcott v. Superior Court Judge, 112 Mich. 311.

¶ 930. The constitutionality of Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 183, § 25, requiring druggists in local option counties to file reports with the prosecuting attorney, appears to be sustained by authorities, as against the contention that it creates a discrimination between druggists doing business in such counties and others residing in other counties where prohibition has not been adopted.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

¶ 931. The Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 183), by requiring the making of weekly reports of sales to the prosecuting attorney, is not unconstitutional as discriminating against druggists doing business in a local option county, as compared with druggists of counties in which that law is not in force.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

¶ 932. The Michigan Local Option Law of 1889, making it unlawful to manufacture or sell malt, vinous, spirituous or intoxicating liquors, in any county where a majority of the electors vote in favor of prohibition, but not applying to sales by druggists for medicinal, mechanical or scientific purposes, is not invalid as making an unlawful discrimination in favor of druggists.—Eberle v. Michigan, 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; affirming 167 Mich. 477.

§ 222. ——Procedural and remedial laws.

See also ante ¶ 922.
Denial of equal protection of the laws in procedure, see post § 224.

¶ 933. A statute (Laws 1893, Act No. 208) requiring a judge of one circuit to hold the terms of court of another circuit when the resident judge of the latter is disqualified, or whenever additional assistance is required to expedite business, is not open to the objection that it imposes upon one circuit judge duties not imposed upon others and that it therefore is class legislation. Const. 1850, art. 6, § 2, provides that circuit judges may hold courts for each other, and that they shall do so when required by law.—Toll v. Jerome, 101 Mich. 468.

¶ 934. Laws 1881, Act No. 150 (How. St., § 978), providing for the enrolment of not more than one hundred and fifty contributing members in each company and battery of state troops, and exempting such members from jury duty, is not objectionable as class legislation.—Hall v. Burlingame, 88 Mich. 438.

¶ 935. How. St., § 7317, permitting service in adjoining counties in actions for trespass to lands and for labor performed by a person or company, is invalid as class legislation, in that it gives special privileges to suitors upon specified classes of claims, and also excludes corporations, and, so far as the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is concerned, associations of individuals, from the benefit of its provisions.—O'Connell v. Menominee Lumber Co., 113 Mich. 124.

¶ 936. How. St., § 7717e, which provides that, "in any suit brought to recover for the personal work and labor of the plaintiff, security for costs shall not be ordered in case the plaintiff shall make and file with the court an affidavit that he has a good and meritorious cause of action, and is unable to procure security for costs," is not unconstitutional, as discriminating in favor of one class of persons at the expense of another.—Jones v. Shiawassee Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 664.

¶ 937. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 25, § 1, providing for suit against an unincorporated voluntary association in its own name is not unconstitutional as aimed at organized labor; there is nothing in the law to connect it with such organizations alone.—United States Heater Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, 129 Mich. 354.

¶ 938. No unconstitutional discrimination between suitors is made by a statute (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 181) permitting the deposition of a party to an action at law, taken at the instance of the adverse party, to be introduced on the trial at the option of the party taking the same, and not allowing the other party to introduce it.—Mulhern v. Kent Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 528.

¶ 939. Laws 1885, Act No. 234, authorizing an attorney's fee of $25 to be taxed against a railroad company in case of judgment against it for injuries to stock on account of its failure to fence its track as required by the statute, is unconstitutional and void for granting special advantages to one class of suitors at the expense of another.—Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 70 Mich. 382; Schut v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 70 Mich. 433; Rinear v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 70 Mich. 620; Lafferty v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 71 Mich. 35.

¶ 940. Laws 1887, Act No. 147 (How. St., § 7091a), which provides that upon recovering judgment in justice's court for personal services plaintiff shall have an attorney's fee of $5 taxed in his favor, is unconstitutional, being an attempt to give special advantages to one class of suitors at the expense of another.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

¶ 941. Pub. Acts 1885, No. 14, § 1 (How. St., § 1717a), limiting the right of exemption to the articles therein enumerated, not exceeding $500 in value, in cases where the execution is issued upon a judgment for personal labor, is invalid as class legislation.—Burrows v. Brooks, 113 Mich. 307.

¶ 942. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10756-10770, providing for a lien on logs, shingles, etc., although construed to authorize the recovery of costs in justice court in excess of the limit of ten dollars fixed by Comp. L. 1897, § 838, is not unconstitutional as class legislation.—Lagoo v. Seaman, 136 Mich. 418.

¶ 943. Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 307, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12865, giving either party the right to call the opposite party or his agent or employee for cross-examination, is not unconstitutional as conferring unequal privileges with no distinction relating to the parties or the witnesses which could justify the classification.—Maki v. Mohawk Min. Co., 176 Mich. 497.

§ 223. Equal justice.

Particular laws considered, see ante §§ 216-222.

Right of nonresidents to sue in state, see post § 228.

¶ 944. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 25, § 1, providing for suit against an unincorporated voluntary association in its own name is not unconstitutional as giving a right against both the organization and the individuals, while it suing could have but one.—United States Heater Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, 129 Mich. 354.

¶ 945. Laws 1885, Act No. 234, allowing plaintiff in an action for the value of cattle killed by a railroad company to tax as costs an attorney fee of $25, is unconstitutional; since the law must be administered as to corporations with the same equality and justice that are bestowed upon other suitors.—Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 70 Mich. 382.

§ 224. Equal protection of the laws.

Equality clause under state constitution, see ante § 213.

Particular laws considered, see post §§ 225-227.

Equal protection in contempt proceedings, see also ante ¶ 608.

¶ 946. As a general rule equal protection of the law is not denied by a state in contravention of the Federal Constitution, 14th Amendment, where the law operates alike upon all persons, corporations or property similarly situated.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

¶ 947. It is questionable whether a statute —e. g., the Assignment Law of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l)— can legislate upon the claims of foreign creditors and place them on a better footing than domestic ones.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

¶ 948. Even if a state statute has for years been construed by the courts of the state as requiring that the jury in condemnation cases be one of inquest, a subsequent decision in a particular case that a common-law jury subject to be controlled by a presiding judge is proper does not deny to the landowner the equal protection of the laws contrary to U. S. Const., amend. 14.—Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445; affirming 103 Mich. 556.

¶ 949. How. St., § 8086, as amended by Laws 1889, Act No. 266, relating to service upon foreign corporations of writs of garnishment, does not conflict with U. S. Const., amend. 14, in denying to such corporations equal protection of law.—Shafer Iron Co. v. Iron Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 464.

¶ 950. The provision of Local Acts 1883, No. 280, increasing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Detroit to $500 is authorized by Const., art. 6, § 18, fixing their jurisdiction "with such exceptions and restrictions as may be provided by law;" and the act is not thereby rendered repugnant to the Federal Constitution, Amend. XIV, as denying equal protection of the law by differing from the jurisdiction of other justices.—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654.

¶ 951. Inasmuch as Comp. Laws of 1897, § 10721, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13777, relating to attorney's fees in actions to foreclose mechanic's liens, permits the allowance of discretionary attorney's fees to the successful party, whether complainant or defendant, such statute is not class legislation in violation of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution.—Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ortman, 100 Mich. 429.

¶ 952. For a discussion on the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment in its application to criminal procedure, and especially to the right to have a jury find specifically the degree of homicide and the trial judge pass sentence, as against a contention that the Supreme Court might correct an error by imposing such a sentence as the law requires, see People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264, per Hooker, McAlvay and Blair, JJ., in separate opinion specially concurring in the result at page 283 et seq.

¶ 953. The benefit of equal protection of the law clause of the 14th Amendment to the federal constitution was not denied to accused persons and other litigants in Wayne County by the Wayne County Jury Law of 1893, as amended in 1895 (Pub. Acts 1893, p. 337; id. 1895, p. 69), providing that the jury lists shall be made up and returned by a board of seven jury commissioners, appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate, and that the names of the persons to be returned need not appear on the assessment rolls, although by the general laws of the state the officers authorized to make and return the jury list are elected by the people in their several townships and in city wards and it is required that the jurors be of those who are assessed on the assessment roll.—Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 50 L. ed. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; affirming 136 Mich. 698.

¶ 954. Laws 1887, Act No. 31, providing that no saloon shall be maintained or any liquor sold or given away to any inmate of the Soldiers' Home within one mile of such home, is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws (U. S. Const., Amend. XIV) as applied to one who had a building and premises within one mile devoted to such trade and in use for the liquor traffic before the home was established.—Whitney v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 71 Mich. 234.

¶ 955. Local Acts 1905, No. 668, making it a penal offense for any person to keep a saloon where spirituous or intoxicating liquors are sold within 100 rods of any public school in Berrien county does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.—White v. Bracelin, 144 Mich. 332.

¶ 956. Act 64, Public Acts 1907, providing for the punishment of burglary with high explosives, does not violate the "equal protection" clause on the ground that there are other statutes providing a less punishment for the same crime under which accused could have been punished, since the earlier statutes are repealed in so far as they conflict with the later statute.—People v. Mire, 173 Mich. 357.

§ 225. ——Trade, business and transportation laws.

Blue Sky Law, see post § 226.

¶ 957. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 212, § 5, which provides that no one who is an alien can receive a certificate from the barbers' board of examiners violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the U. S. Const. and is void.—Templar v. State Board of Examiners of Barbers, 131 Mich. 254.

¶ 958. A state cannot under its police power require that barbers' licenses can be granted only to citizens, since all persons are entitled to the equal protection of the laws, and such business is in no wise injurious to the morals, the health or even the convenience of the community, provided the applicant has the requisite skill to practice his calling.—Templar v. State Board of Examiners of Barbers, 131 Mich. 254.

¶ 959. Comp. L. 1897, § 7246, providing who shall be the agent or agents of a foreign insurance company doing business in the state, does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 225.

¶ 960. The Bulk Sales Law does not deny the equal protection of the laws.—Kidd, Dater & Price Co. v. Musselman Grocery Co., 217 U. S. 461, 54 L. ed. 839, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; affirming 151 Mich. 478.

¶ 961. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 214, providing for licensing transient merchants, which authorizes a village or city council to suspend the provisions of the act in any specific case, is unconstitutional as violating U. S. Const., Amend. 14, and Const., art. VI, § 32, guaranteeing equal protection of the laws to all persons.—Brown v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 145 Mich. 418.

¶ 962. Equal protection of the laws is not denied by Comp. L. 1897, § 5324, which provides that no person shall be authorized to travel from place to place within this state for the purpose of carrying to sell, or exposing to sale, any goods, wares or merchandise, or to take orders for the purchase of goods, wares or merchandise by sample lists or catalogues unless he shall have obtained a license as a hawker and peddler.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417; reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

¶ 963. A statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 6234, subd. 9) requiring railroad companies to keep on sale at specified prices less than the maximum rates previously established by the legislature for the carriage of passengers, 1,000-mile tickets valid for two years, and to be issued, whenever required by the purchaser, in the name of the purchaser, his wife and children, is a discrimination in favor of a few of the persons having occasion to travel on the railroads, and deprives the companies affected by it of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the federal constitution.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; reversing 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 964. Act No. 104, Public Acts 1909, providing that common carrier railroads are liable to employees injured by the negligence of the company, its officers, agents or employees, or by defects in equipment, and that contributory negligence does not bar recovery if the employee's negligence was of a lesser degree than that of the company, and no contract of employment, etc., is a defense to the action, is discriminatory but does not violate the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution prohibiting inequality in protection of the laws.—Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 173 Mich. 57.

¶ 965. The equal protection of the law clause of the federal Constitution was not violated by the Railroad Commission Act, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530, regulating intra-city transportation on railroads because imposing such severe penalties for disobedience of its provisions as to deter parties affected thereby from testing its validity in the courts, since, irrespective of whether the penalties provided by the act are so excessive as to be void, they are embraced in a section by themselves, and thus plainly separable from the provisions involved, and the question of the constitutionality of the penalty clause may properly be left to be determined should an effort be made to enforce the same.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 198 Fed. 1009; affirmed in 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

¶ 966. The equal protection of the laws was not denied a street railroad company by an order of the railroad commissioner under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 171, § 5 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6868), requiring it to pay a portion of the expense of constructing and operating safety appliances at a grade crossing of a steam railroad, although such latter railroad was built across the street after the street railroad had built its tracks in the street and had occupied them.—Detroit, Ft. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 189 U. S. 383, 47 L. ed. 860, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; affirming 127 Mich. 219.

§ 226. ——Blue Sky Law.

¶ 967. The Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 143, providing for the regulation and supervision of foreign and domestic investment companies, their agents and other persons selling their securities, and making some violations of the act felonies punishable by not more than $5,000 fine and imprisonment for not exceeding five years, and others misdemeanors punishable by not more than $1,000 fine and ninety day's imprisonment, is not invalid as depriving investment companies of the equal protection of the laws because the statutory penalties are so excessive that persons interested dare not make a test case in the ordinary way, since, while such penalties furnish a reason why a court of equity may have jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of the law temporarily, until its validity is determined, yet, the penalties being separable, their possible invalidity may be a defense against their direct enforcement, but does not furnish ground for pronouncing the whole law invalid.—Alabama & N. O. Transp. Co. v. Doyle, 210 Fed. 173.

¶ 968. The equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment to the federal Constitution is not violated by the Blue Sky Law, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 46 (Comp. L. 1915, § 11945 et seq.), providing for the regulation of the sale and disposition of bonds, stocks or other securities within the state by the Michigan Securities Commission and the issuance of licenses, although certain securities are exempted from the operation of the law under § 3, including securities which are listed in any standard manual of information issued by the commission, and the commission may call for additional information than that contained in the manuals, and may, pending the filing of the information, suspend the sale of the securities, and may also suspend, either temporarily or permanently, the sale of any securities listed in such manuals, after a hearing upon notice, if the commission shall find that the sale of such securities would work a fraud upon the purchasers thereof.—Merrick v. N. W. Halsey Co., 242 U. S. 568, 61 L. ed. 498, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227; reversing 228 Fed. 805.

Basis for classification, see also ante § 215.
Taxing foreign corporation and its domestic owned shares, see ante ¶ 653.

¶ 969. Comp. L. 1897, § 5379, providing for a tax of $500 on the business of selling brewed or malt liquors at wholesale, and a tax of $65, on the business of manufacturing such liquors and also providing that no person paying the manufacturer's tax should be liable to pay a wholesale dealers' tax, is not discriminatory against nonresidents so as to be void under the Constitution of the United States.—People v. Voorhis, 131 Mich. 398.

¶ 970. Equal protection of the laws is denied by a tax law when, upon one of two parties engaged in the same kind of business and under the same conditions, burdens are cast which are not cast upon the other. —Michigan Telephone Cases, 185 Fed. 634; affirmed 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833, 229 U. S. 335, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

¶ 971. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 49 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1955 et seq.), providing for the assessment by the state board of assessors of the property of telephone companies on an ad valorem basis, does not offend the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment of the federal Constitution because it taxes the business of the large companies showing receipts of more than $500 each and exempts the companies having receipts amounting to less than such sum where the practical application of the statute results mainly in the taxation of companies organized on a commercial basis for profit and exemption merely of co-operative or farmers' mutual associations, usually unincorporated, conducted at estimated costs, and organized primarily for the purpose of obtaining cheap service, although some small portion of the co-operative companies will be taxed and some small portion of the profit making companies will be exempt.—Citizens' Tel. Co. v. Fuller, 229 U. S. 322, 57 L. ed. 1206, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; affirming 185 Fed. 634.

¶ 972. A legislature is not bound to impose the same rate of tax upon one class of property that it does upon another, it being sufficient if all of same class are subjected to the same rate and the tax is administered impartially upon them.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; affirming 138 Fed. 223.

¶ 973. It was not designed by the 14th Amendment to the federal Constitution to prevent a state from changing its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equality, to prevent the classification of property for purposes of taxation, or the imposition of different rates upon different classes. It is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class, and the method for the assessment and collection of the tax is not inconsistent with natural justice.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; affirming 138 Fed. 223.

¶ 974. The benefit of the equal protection of the laws clause of the 14th Amendment to the federal Constitution is not denied railroad companies merely because a statute provides for a separate classification of railroad property for the purpose of taxation. —Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223; affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 975. It is within the power of a state, without violating the federal Constitution, to separate a particular class of property, subject it to assessment and taxation in a mode and at a rate different from that imposed upon other property, and apply the proceeds to state, rather than to local purposes.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; affirming 138 Fed. 223.

¶ 976. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1933 et seq., providing for the assessment by the state board of assessors of the property of railroad companies at the average rate of taxation of the current year levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school and municipal purposes, upon receipt of reports from each of the taxing districts, and for taxation of the properties of the companies as assessed by it, distinctly states the tax and object to which it is to be applied and hence does not constitute a denial of the equal protection of the laws as violating Michigan Const., art. 14, § 14, requiring every law imposing a tax to state the tax and object to which it is to be applied. —Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223; affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 977. The equal protection of the law is not denied by a tax statute providing that in the taxation of the personal property of railroad companies the credits of the companies shall be taxed at their cash value without any deduction of indebtedness owed by them, although under other statutes applicable to personal property, debits are required to be deducted from credits.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223; affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 978. A statute which provides for a different method of taxation of railroads incorporated under statutes authorizing the incorporation of railroad companies from that of logging roads owned by manufacturing companies or individuals does not violate the 14th Amendment to the federal Constitution.—Michigan Railroad Tax Cases, 138 Fed. 223; affirming 201 U. S. 245, 50 L. ed. 744, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

¶ 979. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 95, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1989 et seq., providing for the taxation upon the stocks, bonds and other indebtedness of specially chartered railway companies, of which there is only one and can be no more under the Constitution of 1908, in addition to the regular tax imposed pursuant to the charter of the company on the company itself, while other railroad companies are taxed under the ad valorem tax law, is invalid as constituting class legislation, in violation of the 14th Amendment to the federal Constitution.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Fuller, 205 Fed. 86.

§ 228. Abridgment of privileges and immunities of citizens.

General comity of states, see Conflict of Laws, I.

¶ 980. A citizen of another state who goes into Michigan can claim under the federal constitution no more than the privileges and immunities of citizens of Michigan.—Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 34 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012; reversing 32 Fed. 36.

¶ 981. The state into which stolen property is brought is bound, not only as a matter of comity, but as one of constitutional obligation in recognition of the privileges of citizens to render the aggrieved party all proper remedies for its recovery.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 982. The right of a citizen of another state to bring suit in any court of this state which has jurisdiction is guaranteed by Const. U. S., art 4, § 2, which declares that "citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states."—Cofrode v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 332.

¶ 983. Prosecution of a person for having in his possession and under his control wild ducks with intent to ship them out of the state, does not infringe the privileges and immunities granted to citizens by the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, though the ducks were taken on his own premises, wild game being the property of the state.—People v. Van Pelt, 130 Mich. 621.

¶ 984. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223, pertaining to the sale or assignment of a stock of merchandise in bulk, is not a violation of U. S. Const., Amend. XIV, § 1, by discriminating between citizens of different states; since the terms of such act are equally applicable to residents and nonresidents. —Spurr v. Travis, 145 Mich. 721.

¶ 985. The Supreme Court of Michigan having held that the word "agent," in How. St., § 9151, applied to attorneys at law, having convicted a person of embezzlement under that statute upon his plea of guilty of embezzlement as attorney at law, held, that such court did not exceed its jurisdiction or deliver a judgment abridging respondent's privileges or immunities, or deprive him of the law of the land of his domicile. —In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191; affirming 42 Fed. 217.

§ 229. ——Licensing laws.

See also ante ¶¶ 957-959.

¶ 986. The state has the power to prescribe the conditions upon which individuals shall have the right to transact the business of insurance within its borders, so long as it does not violate the provisions of the federal constitution by discriminating against the citizens of other states.—People v. Gay, 107 Mich. 422.

¶ 987. Laws 1883, Act No. 167, enacting that no person shall practice medicine or surgery who is not a graduate of a medical college, unless he has practiced in this state five years previously to the act's taking effect, does not infringe U. S. Const., art. 4, § 2, providing that citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges of citizens in the several states; nor does it violate U. S. Const., Amend. 14, § 1, providing that no state shall enforce any law abridging the privileges of any citizen of the United States. —People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6.

¶ 988. The privileges and immunities of citizens are not denied by a law requiring that persons selling goods and merchandise by traveling around exposing them for sale or by taking orders from lists or catalogues (Comp. L. 1897, § 5324) shall obtain license as hawkers and peddlers.—People v. Stewart, 167 Mich. 417; reversed in 232 U. S. 665, 58 L. ed. 786, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

§ 230. ——Corporate rights and privileges.

See also post ¶ 999.
As class legislation, see ante § 219.

¶ 989. The Federal Constitution, 14th Amendment, protects the privileges and immunities of citizens and not of corporations. —People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

¶ 990. Imposing terms and conditions upon foreign corporations doing business in the state which are not imposed upon domestic corporations, does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 225.

¶ 991. An objection that a statute imposing conditions upon foreign insurance corporations doing business within the state, violates the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States because not imposed upon domestic corporations, is not valid where the courts have virtually imposed the same rule upon domestic corporations.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 225.

¶ 992. The authority of a state to impose conditions upon the privilege of doing business by foreign corporations is well established, and is not affected by the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution.—Attorney General ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 993. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 255, does not infringe the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, in that the limit to which it will permit interference with foreign corporations is to punish or prevent unlawful acts, but the state may exclude a foreign corporation from the right of doing business under said act.—Attorney General ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 994. The General Building Association Act, as amended in 1895, making it unlawful for any corporation organized under the laws of any other state to engage in the business of a building and loan association until it shall comply with certain requirements of the act, including filing a copy of its act of incorporation, and filing a franchise fee, and providing that the secretary of state may, at any time, for reasonable causes, with the concurrence of the attorney general, revoke the authority of any foreign corporation to do business in the state, that a receiver may be appointed for the assets of such foreign corporation in the state, that stockholders and creditors in the state shall have a first lien on all assets of such foreign corporation in the state, and that its business in the state shall be closed by the receiver and its assets converted into money, to satisfy the claims of such stockholders and creditors, is invalid as violating the federal Constitution, art. 4, § 2, providing that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens in the several states. —Maynard v. Granite State Provident Ass'n, 92 Fed. 435.

§ 231. ——Liquor laws and regulations.

Denials of equal protection, see ante § 224. Police regulation as to admitting women to saloons, see also ante ¶ 512.

¶ 995. The privileges and immunities of citizens are not abridged (U. S. Const., Amend. XIV) by Laws 1887, Act No. 31, prohibiting maintenance of any saloon within one mile of the Soldiers' Home or the furnishing of liquor to inmates thereof, though such law was enacted and the home was established after the objecting person had acquired property within one mile and devoted it to that business.—Whitney v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 71 Mich. 234.

¶ 996. Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, amending section 15 of the Local Option Statute (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889) and excepting the sale of wine or cider from home-grown fruit in quantities not less than five gallons from the operation of said statute, and Act No. 170, Pub. Acts 1903, amending said section 15 of said Local Option Statute, and excepting the manufacture of wine and cider to be sold to persons outside of the county, are unconstitutional as discriminating against the products and citizens of other states.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477; affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 997. The Local Option Act, Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, and Pub. Acts 1903, No. 170, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5017 et seq., in so far as it provides that the sale of wine or cider from home-grown fruit in quantities of not less than five gallons, and the sale at wholesale of wine or cider manufactured in a county to parties residing outside the county may be made, is invalid under Art. IV, § 2 of the federal Constitution providing that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, but the rest of act is valid. —People v. Lankton, 197 Mich. 470.

¶ 998. U. S. Const., Amend. 14, § 1, which provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, etc., does not forbid police regulations in protection of the weaker members of society, such as legislation (How. St., § 2283d3) making it unlawful to allow minors in places where intoxicating liquors are sold.—People v. Japinga, 115 Mich. 222.

¶ 999. Comp. Laws, § 5379, as amended by Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, making it a crime for the agent of a foreign corporation to solicit of wholesalers in Michigan orders for liquor to be accepted by the home office of the corporation, is not unconstitutional as unjustly discriminating against nonresidents.—People v. Swenson, 162 Mich. 397.

XI. EX POST FACTO AND RETROACTIVE LAWS, AND VESTED RIGHTS.

§ 232. Ex post facto laws.

Ex post facto clause, see Const., art. II, § 9.

¶ 1000. The constitutional inhibition of ex post facto laws does not refer to any but criminal cases or offenses.—Scott v. Smart's Ex'rs, 1 Mich. 295.

¶ 1001. Const., art. 4, § 43, which prohibits the legislature from passing any ex post facto law, is not violated by Pub. Acts 1889, No. 149, § 8016a, authorizing the commencement of suit by attachment before the maturity of the debt.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 503.

¶ 1002. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 237, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5108 et seq., relating to the determination of qualifications of persons to practice medicine and the issuance of certificates of registration, and requiring all persons engaged in the practice of medicine to obtain such a certificate, is not an ex post facto law, it simply requiring continuing evidence of the qualifications as a physician of one already engaged in, and licensed to, practice.—Reetz v. People, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; affirming 127 Mich. 87.

§ 233. ——Increasing or diminishing imprisonment.

¶ 1003. Laws 1893, Act No. 118, § 33, which impliedly provides for estimating the credits of convicts in the state prison upon a schedule less favorable than the one in force when they were sentenced, diminishes the right given them by How. St., § 9704, to earn by good behavior a certain reduction of sentence, and is to that extent ex post facto, its effect being to increase, not to mitigate, punishment. —In re Canfield, 98 Mich. 644.

¶ 1004. A statute (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 118) denying to convicts under sentence for a second offense the same reductions from their sentence for good behavior that are allowed to other convicts is not ex post facto as applied to the punishment of an offense subsequently committed, although the offender had been convicted of his first offense before the passage of the act.—In re Miller, 110 Mich. 676.

¶ 1005. The indeterminate Sentence Act (Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136), if retroactive, is void since the minimum punishment provided by it is greater than the minimum under the former law.—In re Lambrecht, 137 Mich. 450.

§ 234. Retroactive legislation in general.

Ex post facto laws, see ante § 232.

¶ 1006. There is nothing in the national constitution forbidding congress from passing retrospective statutes, except when they are of the class technically known as ex post facto; and congress may pass them, even though private rights are affected thereby, unless they are invalid for some other reason than their retrospective character.—Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 214.

[The foregoing case contains an explanation of the limitations on the power to pass retrospective laws, pointing out that such limitations are not based on the fact that vested rights are affected retroactively but on their being either technically ex post facto, or else having the effect to deprive of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or else on some other specific limitation. —Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 214, at page 219, per Cooley, J.]

¶ 1007. Retrospective laws, or laws affecting rights and remedies in pending proceedings, are not necessarily invalid. Unless they bear injuriously upon some private or vested right, or fall without the domain of general legislative power, or violate some constitutional interdict, they are valid.—Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

¶ 1008. The Legislature cannot make valid retrospectively what it could not originally have authorized.—People ex rel. Butler v. Saginaw County Sup'rs 26 Mich. 22.

Statutes of limitation, see post §§ 238, 239.
Vested rights respecting procedure or remedy, see post § 244.
Curing errors in proceedings, see also post §§ 249-251.

¶ 1009. A statute which does not confer new rights or create new liabilities, but which affects the remedy merely, is not given retroactive effect by being applied to transactions which took place before its passage. —Heineman v. Schloss, 83 Mich. 158.

¶ 1010. As funds received on a sale of goods by fraudulent mortgagees could previously have been reached in equity, a statutory amendment (How. St., §§ 8059, 8091) rendering such mortgagees liable in garnishment for such funds affects the remedy merely, and is applicable to transactions which took place before the amendment was passed.—Heineman v. Schloss, 83 Mich. 153.

¶ 1011. Existing statutes and common-law remedies may be changed or abolished by the legislature except as to vested rights.—Mackin v. Detroit-Timkin Axle Co., 187 Mich. 8.

§ 236. ——Taking away all remedy.

By imposing limitation on action, see also post ¶ 1019.
Right of action or defense as vested right, see post § 242.
Rights in remedies, see post § 244.

¶ 1012. It is within the power of a legislature to change the formalities of legal procedure, but it is not competent to make such changes as to impair the enforcement of rights.—Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274.

¶ 1013. A remedy created by the legislature in derogation of the common law can be taken away by repealing the statute.—John Hanes & Co. v. Wadey, 73 Mich. 178.

¶ 1014. The legislature has the constitutional authority, having provided a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law to recover back taxes illegally assessed and collected, to take away the remedy by injunction to restrain their collection as is done by Laws 1885, Act No. 153, § 107.—Eddy v. Township of Lee, 73 Mich. 123.

¶ 1014a. The legislature may take away from the circuit courts the power to issue injunctions to restrain the assessment or collection of taxes, where a remedy by suit to recover taxes paid under protest has been provided. So held of the Tax Law of 1889.—Lake Superior Ship Canal Ry. & Iron Co. v. Aplin, Auditor General, 79 Mich. 351.

§ 237. ——Granting new or additional remedy or procedure.

Granting lien and procedure to enforce same, see post § 248.

¶ 1015. A statute which merely gives a new remedy, where none existed before, is not objectionable as depriving a party of vested rights.—Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

¶ 1016. Sess. L. 1851, p. 68, amending R. S. 1846, chap. 79, How. St., § 6140, whereby one who had, previously to the passage of the act, become equitably vested with the title which the purchasers at an execution sale acquired by the expiration of the time to redeem, is entitled in equity to a conveyance from the successor of the officer who made the sale—is not liable to the objection that it creates any new, or divests any pre-existing, rights for, although restrospective in its operation, it is only so in providing a remedy where none existed before, without in any way affecting the judgment debtor's rights.—Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

¶ 1017. A statute giving the creditors of a corporation a new remedy against stockholders cannot affect those who took shares in the corporation before its passage; nor can it, so far as existing claims are concerned, supersede the remedies in force when they arose and in reliance upon which they were contracted.—Grand Rapids Sav. Bank v. Warren, 52 Mich. 557.

¶ 1018. Plaintiff was injured in Canada by defendant foreign corporation, prior to the passage of Act No. 3, Pub. Acts 1909. At that time, under the law of Michigan, he had no right to serve process on defendant in Michigan. Held, that said Act No. 3, which is retroactive and gave plaintiff the right to serve defendant in a cause of action arising before its passage, is not unconstitutional, since it extends only plaintiff's remedy and not his cause of action.—Daniels v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 163 Mich. 468.

§ 238. ——Changing or imposing limitations of actions.

Retrospective laws of limitations as lacking due process, see ante § 146.
Acts requiring possessor to bring action to vindicate his right, see post § 239.

¶ 1019. The legislature has general power to pass limitation laws prescribing the time within which parties shall assert their rights by suit; but this power is not so unlimited as to enable it, under the form of a limitation law, to take away all remedy.—Price v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 318.

¶ 1020. The legislature can limit the time for bringing suit against an adverse holder even if his possession began under void proceedings.—Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 93.

¶ 1021. A statute of limitation may be given a retroactive effect, but it must fix a definite time within which all suits where the right of action had accrued prior to the passage of the act must be brought. It cannot be left to the courts to fix the limitation.—Ludwig v. Stewart, 32 Mich. 27.

¶ 1022. Laws 1871, Act No. 145 (How. St., § 8718) amended the statute of limitations so as to run against Canadian as well as domestic creditors, but allowed one year from the time when the act would take effect for bringing suit on all claims that it would otherwise bar at once. Held valid, because it clearly fixed the date of limitation.—Krone v. Krone, 37 Mich. 308.

¶ 1023. Laws 1869, Act No. 89 (How. St., § 8736), requiring actions on judgments to be instituted within ten years from their entry, could be applied to causes of action already existing, because it expressly fixed the period of limitation.—Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287.

§ 239. ——Limitations against person in possession.

¶ 1024. One who is in actual or constructive possession of property cannot be compelled to take measures against an opposing claimant; and a statute depriving him of his rights for a failure to do so is in no sense a limitation law, but an unlawful confiscation.—Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329.

¶ 1025. The statute of 1858 (Sess. L. p. 192, § 135), which undertakes to make deeds given by the auditor general of the lands bid off by the state and remaining undisposed of for five years conclusive evidence of an absolute title in fee-simple in the grantee, even against the original owner who has remained in undisturbed possession of the lands, is not valid as an act of limitation.—Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12.

§ 240. Tax and assessment laws.

Imposing limitations on person in possession disputing tax title, see ante § 239.
Denying right to defend against tax deed by making it conclusive, see post ¶ 1038.
Adding burden of interest or mode of enforcement, see also post § 248.
Curative laws, see post § 250.

¶ 1026. The power vested by the liquor law (Laws 1887, Act No. 313) in the county treasurer to require new bonds "in any other contingency that he shall determine requires it," is void because it works a forfeiture of the rights obtained by paying the taxes imposed for the year's business, as well as the breaking up of the business.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 1027. It was competent to provide, under the Tax Law of 1889, for the sale of lands for taxes assessed and returned unpaid prior to 1889; said statute, though providing a new method for collecting taxes, protects the rights of delinquent taxpayers, giving each a day in court to show the invalidity of the tax.—Aplin, Auditor General v. Roberts, 83 Mich. 471. See Humphrey v. Auditor General, 70 Mich. 292.

¶ 1028. The right, under the Act of 1858, (How. St., § 5394), of the counties to the interest on sales of swamp lands, is not vested, but is merely an unexecuted and revocable gift from the state; and Laws 1887, Act No. 141, which requires the taxes that had been collected under Laws 1885, Act No. 222, to pay the sums due the counties to be credited back to the counties where they were levied, is valid, and prevents the issue of a mandamus to the auditor general to issue a warrant for the interest money collected under the Act of 1885.—Sanilac County Sup'rs v. Auditor General, 68 Mich. 659.

§ 241. Vested character of rights affected.

[Note. The protection of "vested rights" is derived from the various guaranties and limitations treated of ante IV-X. If vested and if affected by subsequent legislation, then there may be an infringement of the due process clause, or of some other clause. If there is no vested right, then the statute must be assailed, if at all, under some provision which does not depend on injury to vested rights of persons. For this reason the following sections do not purport to be exhaustive of the cases, but merely to collect decisions passing on whether or not certain rights are "vested."]

¶ 1029. Where a bounty offered under a law of the state is actually earned, the reduction of the bounty by a subsequent amendment of the law does not deprive the party who has earned it of the full bounty given by the original act.—People ex rel. East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. Board of State Auditors, 9 Mich. 327.

¶ 1030. A soldier's right to a state bounty of $100 under the provisions of Laws 1864, Act No. 23, being a vested one, could not lawfully be taken away by the legislature.—Smith v. Aplin, Auditor General, 80 Mich. 205.

¶ 1031. A physician made a contract with the board of health of a township for the care of indigent persons affected by contagious disease, at a certain price per visit and mileage. The law in force made the county liable to pay for such services upon allowance by the local board. After the services were rendered but before the amount was allowed, the law was changed so as to give county boards authority to pass upon the reasonableness of claims for such services, and under this law, the amount allowed by the local board pursuant to the contract, was reduced by the supervisors. Mandamus was brought to compel the supervisors to allow the full amount. Held, that the physician had a vested right to payment under the contract and the law as it existed, and the change in the law could not affect the right to recover for services rendered prior to its enactment.—Kapp v. Board of Auditors of Washtenaw Co., 137 Mich. 431.

¶ 1032. A physician, though registered under the Act of 1883, cannot claim to have any vested right to compound or sell drugs and medicines to one not his patient, contrary to the act to regulate the practice of pharmacy, Laws 1885, Act No. 134.—People v. Moorman, 86 Mich. 433.

¶ 1033. Laws of 1885, Act No. 134, which prohibits those who do not comply with its requirements from keeping "open shops for the retailing, disbursing and compounding of medicines and poisons," does not interfere with the vested rights of registered physicians.—People v. Moorman, 86 Mich. 433.

¶ 1034. The legislature may prescribe rules of evidence to govern orders of the probate court for admission of insane persons to asylums where no vested rights are affected, and hence a rule safeguarding the rights of an alleged insane person cannot be held void on the ground that it impairs a vested right since no one can have any vested right to have a person confined in an asylum.—Grinky v. Wayne Probate Judge, 137 Mich. 49.

§ 242. ——Rights of action or defenses.

Taking away all remedy, see ante § 236.
Limitations on rights of possessor of land, see ante § 239.
Passage of curative act pending suit based on defect, see post § 251.

¶ 1035. The right of one who had paid money for liquors sold to him in violation of the prohibitory liquor law, to recover it back as paid without consideration, was a vested right which subsequent amendments or changes in the statute could not affect.—Peters v. Goulden, 27 Mich. 171.

¶ 1036. No one has a vested right in a remedy for a tort which has not yet occurred.—Mackin v. Detroit-Timkin Axle Co., 187 Mich. 8.

¶ 1037. Inasmuch as Pub. Acts 1905, No. 280, extended the right of action for wrongful death to persons who had entered the marriage relation in good faith, whereas formerly it extended only to the lawful spouse, it is invalid as to cases where the death occurred before its passage, because it constitutes an attempt to create a cause of action where none existed before.—Philip v. Heraty, 147 Mich. 473.

¶ 1038. It is not within the power of the legislature to deny the right to defend against a tax deed by declaring that it shall be conclusive evidence of title in fee in the grantee.—Taylor v. Devenux, 100 Mich. 581; McKinn v. Meston, 104 Mich. 642.

§ 243. ——Verdicts and judgments.

¶ 1039. A statute authorizing judgments to be entered for double the damages found by the jury for certain injuries was repealed after verdict but before judgment in a pending case. Held, that plaintiff's right to a judgment for double damages was not a vested one which the repeal could not take away.—Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

¶ 1040. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 15, providing that appeals dismissed, "either before or after the passage" of such act, for nonpayment of the register's fee, may be reinstated upon such terms as may be just, upon the appellant satisfying the Supreme Court that such fee has been paid, and that justice requires a revision of the case upon the merits, is unconstitutional as to an appeal from a decree of divorce dismissed before the passage of such act; since vested rights have been conferred by the decree appealed from.—Lohrstorfer v. Lohrstorfer, 140 Mich. 551.

¶ 1041. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 379, relating to the facilitation of the collection of temporary or permanent alimony ordered to be paid in divorce suits is not given ex post facto effect so as to impair vested rights of the defendant in a divorce suit where the court renders a modified order for the payment of alimony to the register of court after such law goes into effect, although such law was not in effect at the time the original decree was rendered.—Gittings v. Gittings, 197 Mich. 446.

§ 244. ——Procedure and remedies.

¶ 1044. The lien given by the mechanic's lien law is no part of the contract, but a means of enforcing the payment of the debt arising from its performance; and, being a remedy given by law, not of the essence of the contract, it is not a vested right, but may be taken away by the legislature.—John Hanes & Co. v. Wadey, 73 Mich. 178.

¶ 1045. A statute extending the right to gain service on a foreign corporation disturbs no vested right of a defendant, since it does not extend the cause of action.—Daniels v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 163 Mich. 468.

§ 245. ——Corporate charters and franchises.

Statutes allowing service in stated mode, see also ante ¶ 1045.

¶ 1046. It seems that an act subsequent to the charter of a corporation, and not assented to by it, which subjects the corporation to a total forfeiture for that which under the charter was cause for partial forfeiture only, is unconstitutional.—People v. Jackson & M. Plank Road Co., 9 Mich. 285.

¶ 1047. If a statute carries a new and additional term into the charter, and imposes a forfeiture of the franchise for a violation thereof, it is invalid.—People v. Jackson & M. Plank Road Co., 9 Mich. 285.

¶ 1048. A majority of the stockholders of a corporation have no vested right to elect the directors which is infringed by the stockholders' minority law (How. St., § 4885a), giving the minority of the stockholders the power, by cumulative voting, to elect a representative membership in the board of directors.—Attorney General v. Looker, 111 Mich. 498; affirmed in 179 U. S. 46, 45 L. ed. 79, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21.

§ 246. ——Expectancies and rights in succession.

¶ 1049. The legislature has power to cut off the right of curtesy initiate before it becomes vested.—Hathon v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 93; Hill v. Chambers, 30 Mich. 422.

¶ 1050. The mere expectancy of the husband to curtesy created by R. S. 1846, p. 340, and Const. 1850, art. 16, § 5, and which, in consequence of the wife's continuance in life never ripened into a vested right or interest, was not protected against legislative abrogation.—Hill v. Chambers, 30 Mich. 422.

¶ 1051. No vested rights were disturbed by the act of March 29, 1871 (see How. St., § 5875), taking away from administrators the power of taking or holding the possession, rents and profits of the estates of their intestates.—Campau v. Campau, 25 Mich. 127.

¶ 1052. The estate by curtesy, as created by the Revised Statutes of 1846, did not interfere with or limit any rights of the wife, but left her in the full enjoyment of them; hence it was within the power of the legislature to subject existing estates thereto, such power being the same as that modifying the rules of descent for the subsequent transmission of property.—Brown v. Clark, 44 Mich. 309.

¶ 1053. The legislature has the power, among others in that connection, under the Revised Statutes of 1846, to subject any existing estate to prospective curtesy.—Brown v. Clark, 44 Mich. 309.

§ 247. ——In or affecting highways.

¶ 1054. How. St., § 1315, declaring that highways by user "shall be four rods in width, and that where such highways are situated on section or quarter-section lines such lines shall be the center of said roads, and the land belonging to said roads shall be two rods in width on each of said lines," cannot affect vested rights so as to include in the bounds of a highway that had already become such by user any land not actually used.—Coleman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 160; McKay v. Doty, 63 Mich. 581.

¶ 1055. Persons, the value of whose property might be affected by the discontinuance of a highway not running through it, have no such vested interest in the right to pass and repass in the highway as can preclude the legislature from taking it away.—People ex rel. Bristol v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 20 Mich. 95.

¶ 1056. Although a city which grants to an individual by a contract in writing the privilege of constructing a private sewer in its streets, with the right to the builder to charge abutting owners for connecting therewith, may superintend the construction of the sewer, see that connections are properly made, and regulate its use so that other citizens shall not be injured, the builder obtains by such grant a vested right, and not a mere license, and it cannot unreasonably be interfered with.—Stevens v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 72.

§ 248. ——Imposing liens and statutory charges.

Mechanics' lien proceedings, see also ante ¶ 1044.

¶ 1057. It is competent for the legislature to provide a remedy additional to one previously existing, e. g., to give a statutory lien for services where the common law provides one.—Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254.

¶ 1058. Laws 1887, Act No. 229 (How. St., §§ 8427a-8427p), establishing a lien for labor and services upon shingles, etc., cannot be applied to a contract for the manufacture of shingles, made before the act took effect.—Bourgette v. Williams, 73 Mich. 208.

¶ 1059. It is doubtful whether it would be competent for the legislature, by increasing the rate of interest charged, to increase the burden provided by the law under which a tax was assessed.—Jackson Fire Clay, Sewer Pipe & Tile Co. v. Snyder, 93 Mich. 325.

¶ 1060. The Drain Law of 1885 is not valid in so far as it provides that drain taxes levied under the Drain Law of 1881 shall be a personal claim against the land owner.—Mogg v. Hall, 83 Mich. 576.

§ 249. Curative and validating laws.

Attempted cure pending suit based on defect, see post § 251.

Operation and effect of curative laws, see specific topics involving them, e. g., Acknowledgments, §§ 22, 23; Taxes, XII.

¶ 1061. Curative statutes may cover any mere irregularity in the cause of proceeding for a lawful demand, but they can never cure a want of jurisdiction.—Hart v. Henderson, 17 Mich. 218.

¶ 1062. The legislature cannot validate acts that are void for jurisdictional defects. —Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364.

¶ 1063. An act cannot be sustained as a curative statute which does not purport to be such or to validate the previous proceedings, and which recites no error or irregularities, but which merely seeks, by directing the supervisors to levy certain taxes, to avoid the effect of judicial decisions.—People ex rel. Butler v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 26 Mich. 22.

¶ 1064. On the change from the territorial to the state government the legislature of the state abolished the Supreme Court of the territory, and transferred certain causes pending therein to the Supreme Court and court of chancery of the state; but owing to a defect in the law certain other causes were not transferred to any court. Held, that it was competent for the legislature in the following year to pass an act transferring these cases to the Supreme Court of the state.—Scott v. Smart's Ex'rs, 1 Mich. 295.

¶ 1065. When the legislature, by a valid exercise of its authority, has conferred a power to act, and prescribed the mode of action, a substantial compliance with the mode will be essential to a valid exercise of the power. But if the power be defectively or irregularly exercised, and for that reason invalid, the legislature may, by subsequent action, cure any such defect or irregularity, the requirement of which was originally within its discretion, and if its power over the subject was plenary its power of confirmation will be absolute.—People ex rel. Bristol v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 20 Mich. 95.

¶ 1066. A retrospective statute curing defects in legal proceedings, where they are in their nature irregularities only and do not extend to matters of jurisdiction, is not unconstitutional unless expressly forbidden.—Hall v. Perry, 72 Mich. 202.

¶ 1067. Whether the legislature can legalize proceedings taken under a void act, quære.—Taylor v. Youngs, 48 Mich. 268.

¶ 1068. Whether the state can so legalize a bridge as to cut off pre-existing claims for injuries resulting from its maintenance, quære.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

§ 250. ——Tax, assessment or drain proceedings.

See also ante ¶ 1063, post ¶ 1077.

Retrospective tax laws, see ante § 240.

¶ 1069. The legislature has power to cure irregularities in the proceedings for the assessment and collection of any taxes authorized by law, and to perpetuate their lien upon the land until paid; but where an original tax is void, the legislature has no power to validate it, and compel the owner of the land taxed to pay it as a condition to the recovery of his land from one who has bought it at tax sale.—Hart v. Henderson, 17 Mich. 218.

¶ 1070. Whatever the legislature can dispense with in advance it can dispense with retrospectively by enacting that its omission shall not prejudice; so held of certificates to assessment rolls.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

¶ 1071. The legislature cannot pass a curative statute, retroactive in its effect, so as to affect rights of parties that have already become vested; hence Laws 1885, Act No. 247, cannot legalize an assessment roll bearing a defective certificate when sale has already been made and suit therefor begun.—Daniells v. Township of Watertown, 61 Mich. 514.

¶ 1072. How. St., § 1730, is invalid in so far as it seeks to authorize the enforcement of a drain tax that is void for want of jurisdiction to levy it.—Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364.

¶ 1073. How. St., § 1740g3, which confers authority upon a drain commissioner to relay a drain where former proceedings to establish such drain have been declared void "for any cause other than that such drain is unnecessary and not conducive to the public health," etc., is constitutional as applied to a case where the application was declared void; it is not an attempt to validate proceedings jurisdictionally defective without giving the parties concerned an opportunity to be heard.—Hauser v. Burbank, 117 Mich. 463.

¶ 1074. It is entirely within the power of the legislature to correct any error in a local assessment which does not in effect work an injury to the taxpayer, as is done by Local Acts 1901, No. 846, the Charter of Flint.—W. F. Stewart Co. v. City of Flint, 147 Mich. 697.

¶ 1075. Since the legislature cannot make good that which was void when done, a statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 17, § 2) which seeks to validate tax sales, void because made under a prospective tax law for taxes of earlier years, is unconstitutional.—Hall v. Perry, 72 Mich. 202; McNaughton v. Martin, 72 Mich. 276.

§ 251. ——Effect of pendency of suit for relief.

¶ 1076. The pendency of proceedings to reverse irregular action of supervisors will not preclude their confirmation by legislative act.—People ex rel. Bristol v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 20 Mich. 95.

¶ 1077. The legislature cannot reverse judgments directly or indirectly, and a legislative act legalizing a tax roll and healing defects therein will be so construed as not to affect an existing judgment for trespass against the officers for seizing and selling property to pay the illegal tax. Nor would the pendency of a writ of certiorari from the circuit court to review the rulings of the justice by whom the judgment was rendered so affect the force of the judgment as to change this construction of the statute.—Moser v. White, 29 Mich. 59.

XII. ELECTIONS, SUFFRAGE AND PUBLIC OFFICES.

§ 252. Right of suffrage in general.

Relative legislative power as to elections and suffrage, see also ante § 46.

As affected by various laws regulating elections, see post §§ 253-257.

Apportionment of the state, see post §§ 258-260.

Right to hold office, see post § 261 et seq.

Qualifications and eligibility of voters, see Elections, III.

Right of inmate of Soldiers' Home or asylum to vote, see Elections, III.

Liability of officers denying constitutional right to vote, see Elections, X.

General provisions as to elective franchise, see Const., art. III, §§ 1-8.

¶ 1078. The elective franchise is substantially the same in all parts of the state, and cannot be essentially changed in any locality by legislation to regulate the mode of exercising it.—Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 1079. The right of voting cannot be taken away by direct law or impossible conditions.—Warren v. Board of Registration, 72 Mich. 398.

¶ 1080. The constitution authorizes the legislature to enact laws "to preserve the purity of elections, and to guard against abuses of the elective franchise"; but this does not authorize, by direction or indirection, the disfranchisement, without his own fault or negligence, of any elector under the constitution.—Attorney General ex rel. Conely v. Common Council of Detroit, 78 Mich. 545.

¶ 1081. The legislature may regulate but cannot destroy the enjoyment of the elective franchise; whether such regulation be reasonable or unreasonable is for the legislature, not for the courts, to determine so long as such regulation does not become destruction. —Common Council of Detroit v. Rush, 82 Mich. 532.

¶ 1082. Laws of 1889, Act No. 254, providing for cumulative voting in districts entitled to more than one representative in the state legislature, is unconstitutional (a) because the constitution by implication prohibits any elector from casting more than one vote for any candidate for office, (b) because it impairs the equality of electors throughout the different districts, and (c) because it violates the constitutional requirement that representatives in districts entitled to more than one representative shall be elected by a general ticket.—Maynard v. Board of Canvassers of Kent County, 84 Mich. 228.

§ 1083. As the electorate is provided for by the constitution, and as the qualifications of the electors must be uniform throughout the state, Laws 1893, Act No. 138, providing that in all school, village and city elections "women . . . . shall be allowed to vote for all school, village and city officers," etc., is unconstitutional, as granting a franchise not conferred by Const., art. 7, § 1, notwithstanding Const. art. 15, § 14, which provides that officers of cities and villages "shall be elected . . . . at such time or in such manner as the legislature may direct." The word "manner" refers to the details for holding the election for which the constitution has already provided electors.—Coffin v. Board of Election Com'rs of Detroit, 97 Mich. 188.

¶ 1084. Local Acts 1905, No. 536, authorizing the city of Flint to borrow money and issue bonds for the purposes therein mentioned is not unconstitutional because it authorizes only "taxpaying electors" to vote on the submission of the proposition to the electors, the submission not being an election within the contemplation of the Const., art. 7, § 1.—Menton v. Cook, 147 Mich. 540.

¶ 1085. The Act of May 1, 1891, relating to election of presidential electors by districts does not violate the XVth federal Amendment.—McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; affirming 92 Mich. 377.

§ 253. Registration laws.

¶ 1086. The act (Local Acts of 1889, No. 468, p. 994), relating to the registration of voters in Detroit, conflicts with Const., art. 7, § 1, because it recognizes only native-born citizens and naturalized voters, while the constitution recognizes as qualified voters certain additional classes of persons.—Attorney General ex rel. Conely v. Common Council of Detroit, 78 Mich. 545.

¶ 1087. The registration act, Local Acts 1889, No. 468, is unreasonable and void in that it unfairly discriminates between electors; for though permitting a native-born citizen to prove his standing as a voter by his own oath, it requires a naturalized voter to produce his certificate of naturalization, or to show by evidence other than his own oath that such certificate was issued.—Attorney General ex rel. Conely v. Common Council of Detroit, 78 Mich. 545.

¶ 1088. The registration act, Local Acts 1889, No. 468, which has provided for only five registration days during the year, at one of which the elector must personally apply for registration, is unreasonable and void, because making no provision whereby electors who were sick or absent on registration days could vote on election days.—Attorney General ex rel. Conely v. Common Council of Detroit, 78 Mich. 545.

§ 254. Nominations and conduct of elections.

Police regulations of campaign contributions, see ante § 100.
Times for elections, see Elections, I.
Application of constitution in conduct of nominations and election, see Elections, IV-VII.

¶ 1089. It is within the legislative discretion to regulate the elective franchise, and when a legislature has exercised its discretion, as in Pub. Acts of 1913, No. 118, § 17, providing that under certain conditions no primary election need be held, the question whether the regulation is an unreasonable one is a defect for the legislature to remedy and not for the courts.—North v. Cady, 194 Mich. 561.

¶ 1090. The Primary Law, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 118, § 17, providing that where, upon the expiration of the time of filing petitions in any primary for city or county, it appears that there is no opposition to any candidate for any office, a primary election for such office, upon the fulfillment of certain conditions, shall be unnecessary, does not destroy the right of franchise, as the voter may write the name of the candidate for whom he wishes to vote on the ballot.—North v. Cady, 194 Mich. 561.

¶ 1091. Act 281, P. A. 1909, § 37, providing that no candidate at a primary election shall be deemed nominated if his political party at such election casts less than 15 per cent. of the vote cast by such party for Secretary of State at the last preceding November election, and in such case such party shall not be entitled to have the names of its candidates printed on the official ballot does not destroy the right of franchise, but merely regulates it and does not contravene the Federal Constitution or the State Constitution, art. III, §§ 1, 7 and 8.—Brown v. Board Election Com'rs Kent Co., 174 Mich. 477. (Brooke and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1092. Laws of 1889, Act No. 263, regulating the method of conducting elections, does not prevent persons who are blind or otherwise disabled from receiving assistance in preparing their ballots, or from being conducted to the polls when unable to go alone; the statute does not deprive any one of his constitutional right to vote, and is valid.—Common Council of Detroit v. Rush, 82 Mich. 532.

¶ 1093. Laws 1891, Act No. 190, prescribing the manner of conducting and to prevent fraud and deception at elections, is not unconstitutional as putting unreasonable restrictions upon the right to vote by its provisions as to the manner of voting and as to the way in which votes may be received and placed in the ballot box.—Attorney General v. May, 99 Mich. 538.

¶ 1094. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 109, regulating and limiting nomination and election expenses and forbidding contributions for election expenses by corporations is not unconstitutional as unduly and unreasonably restraining the political activities of the people.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357.

§ 255. Voting place or district.

Apportionment of state, see post §§ 258-260.
Change as effecting change of apportionment districts, see post § 260.
Place for voting under the constitution, see also Elections, III.

¶ 1095. The legislature cannot lawfully deprive qualified voters of a county of their right of suffrage by organizing townships in only a portion of it, leaving the remainder unorganized.—People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463.

¶ 1096. Local Acts 1905, No. 577, disorganizing the township of Atkinson and incorporating it in the township of Iron River is not void as contravening Const., art. 7, § 1, in that it operated to disfranchise the electors of Atkinson, by providing for its disorganization one day previous to the annual township election without providing any machinery or method for the electors for the voting of the taxes, and without providing for the registration of the voters, the voters of Atkinson having the right to exercise as inhabitants of the new township the same rights as other citizens of the township.—Attorney General ex rel. Scott v. McColeman, 144 Mich. 67.

¶ 1097. Local Acts 1905, No. 596, entitled "an act to provide for a new voting precinct to be known as voting precinct number two, in the township of Iron River, in the county of Iron," passed before Local Acts 1905, No. 597, providing for the disorganization of a township and adding it to Iron River, is not unconstitutional in that it operated to disfranchise the voters of the disorganized township; because when the townships were consolidated under the second act the voters of the disorganized township acquired the same rights as the electors of the old township and if they were not in the new voting precinct number two they could vote in the precinct number one.—Attorney General ex rel. Scott v. McColeman 144 Mich. 67.

¶ 1098. The military suffrage bill of Feb. 5, 1864, which authorized polls to be opened and ballots cast out of the state, was held unconstitutional as violating art. 7, § 1, of the constitution, which permits no one to vote except in the township or ward where he resides.—People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127.

¶ 1099. Electors cannot be residents of one district and vote in another, and a law which transfers them from one district to another by a change of city boundaries is an alteration of representative districts, and contrary to Const., art. 4, § 4.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116.

¶ 1100. Such a statute as Local Acts 1889, No. 468, p. 994, which would have the effect of requiring an elector to reside in his precinct more than ten days before election to entitle him to vote, violates Const., art. 7, § 1.—Attorney General ex rel. Conely v. Common Council of Detroit, 78 Mich. 545.

§ 256. Ballots and voting machines.

Machine voting as secret, see post § 257.
Right to go on "general ticket," see Elections, IV.

¶ 1101. The ballot is a constitutional method of voting and cannot be changed; and its perpetuation is meant to secure the right to vote without having the voter's opinion of men or measures inquired into.—Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 1102. A voter's rights are not abridged or restricted by a statutory requirement that all ballots shall be of uniform color and size.—Common Council of Detroit v. Rush, 82 Mich. 532.

¶ 1103. Laws 1895, Act No. 17, which makes it unlawful for the board of election commissioners to cause to be printed in more than one column on the official ballot the name of any candidate who shall have received the nomination by two or more parties or political organizations for the same office, is valid, and within the power of the legislature, acting under the provision of Const., art. 7, § 6, that "laws may be passed to preserve the purity of elections, and guard against abuses of the elective franchise."—Todd v. Board of Election Com'rs of Kalamazoo, 104 Mich. 474.

¶ 1104. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 3750-3758, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 234, authorizing the use of voting machines is not void as infringing upon Const., Art. VII, § 2, which provides that all votes shall be by ballot.—City of Detroit v. Board of Inspectors of Election, 139 Mich. 548.

§ 257. Secrecy of ballot or vote.

Right to assistance in voting, see also ante ¶ 1092.
Application of constitution in conduct of election, see Elections, XI.

¶ 1105. An act providing for the use of voting machines in elections, when applied to an election where a voter could not vote for a certain combination of candidates without applying for a separate paper ballot, he thereby being required to make known his want of party fealty, is unconstitutional as depriving the elector of his right to vote a secret ballot.—Helme v. Board Election Com'rs Lenawee Co., 149 Mich. 390.

§ 258. Apportionment into representative or electoral districts.

Power of judiciary in respect to apportionment acts, see also ante § 43.
Formation, equality and change, see post §§ 259, 260.
Apportionment provisions, see Const., art. V §§ 2-4.

¶ 1106. Const., art. IV, § 4, provides that "Each apportionment and the division into representative districts by any board of supervisors shall remain unaltered until the return of another enumeration." Held, that the enumeration referred to is an enumeration of the population by either state or federal authority.—Bay County v. Bullock, 51 Mich. 544.

¶ 1107. Except as prohibited by the restriction of Const., art. 4, § 4, the legislature has power to alter the boundaries of representative districts, and this power is not lodged exclusively with boards of supervisors.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Bradley, 36 Mich. 447.

¶ 1108. The Michigan Act of May 1, 1891, relating to the election of presidential electors and providing that the manner of appointment shall be the election of an elector and an alternate elector in each of the twelve congressional districts into which the state is divided, and of an elector and an alternate elector at large in each of the districts defined by the act, does not contravene the 14th and 15th Amendments to the federal Constitution.—McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; affirming 92 Mich. 377.

¶ 1109. Each apportionment act remains in force until it is supplanted by a subsequent valid act; hence apportionment Acts of 1891 and 1885 being invalid, the secretary of state was directed to issue notices of election of senators and representatives under Act of 1881, unless a special session of the legislature should be called to make a new apportionment.—Board of Supervisors of Houghton County v. Blacker, Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 638; Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1.

§ 259. ——Formation, equality and contiguity of districts.

¶ 1110. Const., art. IV, § 2, providing that "no county shall be divided in the formation of senate districts, except such county shall be equitably entitled to two or more senators," indicates, not that the county is made the basis of apportionment, but that portions of different counties must not be included in the same district.—Williams v. Secretary of State, 145 Mich. 447.

¶ 1111. Const., art. IV, § 2, providing that "no county shall be divided in the formation of senate districts, except such county shall be equitably entitled to two or more senators," indicates that when a county is entitled to two or more senators the obligation is upon the legislature to make such apportionment within the county according to population upon the basis of the last enumeration of the state.—Williams v. Secretary of State, 145 Mich. 447.

¶ 1112. To give to a county with less population than another a greater representation in the legislature is not a constitutional exercise of legislative discretion; the representative apportionment acts of 1885 and 1891 (Laws 1891, Act No. 109) are void accordingly.—Board of Supervisors of Houghton County v. Blacker, Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 638.

¶ 1113. Where the population of a state entitles each 65,000 inhabitants to a senator, the constitutional provisions (art. 4, §§ 2, 4) that no county shall be divided in the formation of districts unless it be equitably entitled to two or more senators, and that senatorial districts shall be arranged according to the number of inhabitants, are violated by an act dividing a county of 82,000 into two districts, while nine counties having a population of 97,000 are united into a single district.—Giddings v. Secretary of State, 93 Mich. 1.

¶ 1114. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 245, providing for the division of the state into senatorial districts, being a re-enactment of Pub. Acts 1901, No. 189, is unconstitutional as violating the provisions of Const., art. IV, § 2, which requires that such division shall be equitably made in accordance with the population as determined by the last enumeration of the state; since according to the state enumeration of 1904 the unit or basis to be considered in arriving at a constitutional apportionment of senate districts is 79,063, while under such act the apportionment was such that the population of the different districts varied from 116,083, in the first, to 52,731, in the fifteenth.—Williams v. Secretary of State, 145 Mich. 447.

¶ 1115. As Act 336 of Mich. Pub. Acts 1913, reapportioning the representative districts of the state joins counties having a moiety or more of the ratio of representation with counties having less population, it contravenes § 3 of art. V, of the Michigan Constitution of 1910, providing that each county, with such territory as may be attached thereto, shall be entitled to a separate representative when it has attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation.—Stevens v. Secretary of State, 181 Mich. 199. (Ostrander and Kuhn, JJ., concurring, but holding that there is now no valid, existing apportionment act.)

¶ 1116. Under Const., art. 4, § 3, which provides that each representative district shall consist of convenient and contiguous territory, contact by land is not required, and an island county may be united with a county from which it is separated by wide and deep navigable waters.—Board of Supervisors of Houghton County v. Blacker, Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 638.

§ 260. ——Change of districts by changing local political divisions.

Indirect change of apportionment districts by annexations to municipalities, see also ante ¶ 526.

¶ 1117. The legislature cannot enlarge the boundaries of a city by annexing parts of adjoining townships when by so doing they alter the boundaries of representative districts in violation of Const., art. 4, § 4. A result absolutely interdicted cannot be accomplished by indirection. The act of April 12, 1873, enlarging Detroit, held void.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116.

¶ 1118. The legislature at its first session after a new enumeration may enlarge a city's limits so as to take in territory before belonging to another representative district, though the new apportionment has not yet been actually made. The act of April 22, 1875, held valid.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Bradley, 36 Mich. 447.

¶ 1119. The division of the state into representative districts is not necessarily altered by an act so setting off a new county from an old one as to carve the new county out of one of the districts in the old one.—Bay County v. Bullock, 51 Mich. 544.

¶ 1120. An act (Local Acts 1889, No. 455) consolidating two cities lying in separate representative districts into one municipality, which by express provision does not change the boundaries of the districts or the manner of electing representatives therein, does not violate Const., art. 4, §§ 3 and 4, which provide for the division of the state into representative districts that shall remain unaltered until another state or national census.—Smith v. Mayor, etc., of City of Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123.

¶ 1121. The provisions of Const., art. 4, § 3, regulating legislative apportionments, and of Const., sched., § 22, preserving existing representation negative the power of the legislature to dismember a county in the formation of representative districts. A county is not to be divided unless entitled to two or more representatives, and in such case the division must be made by the board of supervisors. The representative apportionment act of 1891 (Laws 1891, Act No. 109) is therefore void for dividing Houghton county.—Board of Supervisors of Houghton County v. Blacker, Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 638.

¶ 1122. Local Acts 1905, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit is not unconstitutional because its effect is to place the inhabitants of the annexed territory outside the limits of all senatorial and congressional districts, thus depriving them of the right to be represented in the Senate and Congress, the act having no effect on the boundaries of either a senatorial or congressional district.—Attorney General ex rel. Battishill v. Township Board of Springwells, 143 Mich. 523.

¶ 1123. Local Acts 1905, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit cannot be said to be in violation of Const., art. 4, § 4, where it was passed and given approval by the governor and went into effect on June 8, 1905, although Pub. Acts 1905, No. 244, an act to apportion anew the representatives of the state legislature among the several counties and districts of this state, was approved on June 16 and took effect Sept. 17, 1905, and in accordance with the constitution and laws of the state an enumeration of the inhabitants had been made in 1904, the election under Act No. 627 having been held on July 31, 1905, before the board of supervisors of Wayne county had made a division of the county into legislative districts.—Attorney General ex rel. Battishill v. Township Board of Springwells, 143 Mich. 523.

§ 261. Creation and abolishment of offices.

Power of legislature to alter existing constitutional offices or to create new ones affecting distribution of powers, see ante §§ 46, 66.

Legislative interference with local self government in matter of elections and officers, see ante § 67 et seq.

Encroachment on constitutional offices, see also post § 262.

Construction and operation of the Schedule as to existing offices, see ante § 14.

"Officer" defined and distinguished from public employee, see Officers, I.

Class legislation respecting officers, see ante § 216.

Protection of existing offices and officers on adoption of constitution, see Const., Schedule, §§ 5-7.

¶ 1124. The office of circuit court commissioner is a constitutional county office, and can only be constituted as declared in the constitution.—McClintock v. Laing, 19 Mich. 300.

¶ 1125. It is a matter of serious doubt whether the legislature can create offices which are special in the constitution, and limited by that instrument as to the number to be elected, without some authority, express or implied, in the constitution.—Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 1126. Act 76 of 1879 purported to establish the police court of Grand Rapids and repealed the act under which the police justice was acting, but continued him in office to the end of his term under the title of "police judge." Held, that it did not confer a judicial office by legislation, but only abstained from legislating the police justice out of office.—Coon v. Attorney General, 42 Mich. 65.

¶ 1127. The office of supervisor in cities, not being created by the constitution, may be abolished by the legislature at will, and its functions conferred upon other municipal officers.—Attorney General v. Cogshall, 107 Mich. 181.

¶ 1128. A justice of the peace in a city cannot be legislated out of office before the expiration of the term for which he was elected under Const., art. 6, § 17, by an act reincorporating the city, and reducing the number of justices therein.—Gratopp v. Van Eps, 113 Mich. 590.

§ 262. Encroachment on constitutional offices.

Changes encroaching on constitutional distribution of powers and functions of government, see ante II, B, C.

Changing or affecting courts and judges, or creating new ones, see ante §§ 51-65.

Executive officers under the constitution, see Const., art. VI.

Judicial officers under the constitution, see Const., art. VII.

Constitutional county officers in general, see Const., art. VIII, §§ 3-7.

School officers under the constitution, see Const., art. XI, § 2 et seq.

¶ 1129. Officers named in the constitution are there contemplated as having a known legal character, and though their duties may sometimes be varied by legislation, they cannot be so changed as to destroy the powers of the office or essentially alter it.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76.

¶ 1130 The constitution empowers the Supreme Court to appoint a reporter. The legislature of 1881 enacted that the judges should file head-notes with their opinions. Held, that as the duties of reporter were well known when the constitution was adopted, they were inseparable from the office, and as his principal duty was to prepare head-notes to the decisions of the court, the act deprived the office of one of its essential duties, and was unconstitutional.—In re Head-Notes, 43 Mich. 641.

¶ 1131. A provision of Manistee City Charter (Local Acts 1882, p. 53, chap. 12, § 4) which makes it the duty of policemen to serve and execute all process directed or delivered to them for service, and for that purpose gives to them all powers of constables, and which further provides that they may serve and execute, within the limits of the city, any other process which by law a constable may serve, is constitutional. It does not trench on a constitutional office of constable.—White v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 105 Mich. 606.

¶ 1132. Under Const., art. IV, § 49, adopted as an amendment in 1899, which provides that the legislature may modify, change or abolish the duties of township highway commissioners, Local Acts 1901, No. 303, which authorized a certain township to grade, pave, etc., and otherwise improve certain highways, is not unconstitutional because it withdraws from the highway commissioner, who is a constitutional officer, his functions, since this is expressly authorized by the amendment.—Campau v. Highway Commissioner of Grosse Pointe, 132 Mich. 365.

¶ 1133. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 154, giving the board of state tax commissioners power to supervise assessments, is not open to the objection that the constitutional duties of the state board of equalization are thereby interfered with.—Board of State Tax Commissioners v. Board of Assessors of Grand Rapids, 124 Mich. 491.

¶ 1134. Const., art. 6, § 19, making certain officers, to wit, justices of the peace conservators of the peace does not prevent the legislature from making other officers like conservators, as is done by Local Acts 1905, No. 392, which established for Battle Creek a municipal court with like powers to the justices of the peace whom the court by that act was to supplant, saving and preserving the jurisdiction of all incumbent justices.—Attorney General ex rel. Hooper v. Loomis, 141 Mich. 547.

¶ 1135. Local Acts 1871, No. 408, creating the union school district of the township of Rogers, is not unconstitutional because it takes away most of the authority of the school inspector, an officer provided for by Const., Art. XI, § 1, and places it in a new board of education.—Board of Supervisors of Presque Isle Co. v. Thompson, 61 Fed. 914.

§ 263. Conferring public powers on private persons.

¶ 1136. As no public office can be obtained or exercised without either election or appointment, a statute allowing persons organized into a voluntary corporation to assume a police power is unconstitutional. So held of the act of 1855, providing for the incorporation of rafting, etc., companies (Comp. L. 1857, § 1942).—Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139.

§ 1137. The Acts, 217 of 1859 and 55 of 1873, are invalid in giving the members of voluntary detective associations the powers of constables, and authorizing them to require the assistance of the regular police.—Abels v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 42 Mich. 526.

§ 264. Eligibility and test laws for office.

Eligibility in general under the statutes and application of constitutional principles, see Officers, II.

Ineligibility of incumbent of office to other civil appointment during term for which he was elected, see Officers, II.

Ineligibility of one holding existing office to be governor, see Officers, II.

¶ 1138. Matters of individual conscience, including opinions on political subjects, cannot affect a citizen in any of his legal and political rights.—Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 1139. Whether a "test" for office is made by the provisions in Laws 1871, Act No. 494 (establishing the Detroit board of public works), requiring the members of the board to be selected "in equal numbers from the two political parties represented in the common council," quære.—Purple ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44.

¶ 1140. Laws 1885, Act No. 320, in providing for the appointment of election inspectors in Detroit by a board appointed by the mayor and council, and consisting of two persons from each of the two leading political parties, is unconstitutional: (1) as making particular political opinions a condition to holding office; (2) for sub-delegating the popular power of choosing officers; (3) for interfering with the municipal right to local self-government. —Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 1141. Laws 1893, Act No. 118, vesting the government of the house of correction at Ionia in a board of control to consist of three members, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, is constitutional.—Attorney General v. Parsell, 99 Mich. 381.

§ 265. Mode of appointment or selection.

Relative functions of executive and legislature, see ante § 46.

To fill out interim or for emergency, see post § 266.

Changing time for election as change of terms, see post § 270.

Primary election laws, see ante § 254.

Elections and conduct of them in general, see Elections.

Appointments or selection other than by election, see Officers, II.

¶ 1142. All officers and functionaries exercising powers of government and control over political action must derive their powers and office either from the people directly or from the agents or representatives of the people. —Attorney General v. Detroit Councilmen, 58 Mich. 213.

¶ 1143. The policy of the state inclines in favor of elections by the people of local officers, as against the appointment of the same by the governor or the legislature.—Lawrence v. Hanley, 84 Mich. 399.

¶ 1144. An express requirement of the constitution as to the mode of choice of officers not only precludes every other mode, but must be taken as a circumstance bearing upon the identity of the office.—McClintock v. Laing, 19 Mich. 300.

¶ 1145. The constitution requires all justices to be elected, and it is against public policy to have them chosen otherwise except for temporary purposes.—Edison v. Almy, 66 Mich. 329.

¶ 1146. No public office can be obtained or exercised without either election or appointment.—Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139; Abels v. Ingham County Sup'rs, 42 Mich. 526.

¶ 1147. Jury commissioners appointed by the governor under How. St., §§ 7623-30, are not judicial officers in the sense of the constitutional requirement (Const., art. XV, § 14) that "judicial officers of cities and villages shall be elected," and they are not county appointees.—People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260.

¶ 1148. Laws 1895, Act No. 10, establishing a board of health for Detroit, and vesting in the governor the appointment of the members thereof, does not infringe Const. 1850, art. 15, § 14, which provides that "judicial officers of cities and villages shall be elected, and all other officers shall be elected, or appointed, at such time and in such manner as the legislature may direct." While the members of the board are "officers" within the meaning of said section 14, their duties are not purely municipal, but the statute shows the legislative intent is to use the city through this board as its agent in preventing the spread of contagious disease.—Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 1149. Though the general scheme of the constitution for selection of officers is elective, and includes judicial officers, yet under Const., art. 6, § 23, the legislature may establish courts of conciliation with such powers and duties as may be prescribed by law; and since the latter provision does not constitutionally require election of the judges as is required respecting the other constitutional officers, it is within legislative power to provide for selection of members of the State Board of Mediation and Arbitration otherwise than by election.—Renaud v. State Court of Mediation, 124 Mich. 648.

¶ 1150. In the State Constitution, art. 4, § 49, as amended in 1899, providing "The legislature may also prescribe the powers and duties of boards of supervisors in relation to highways, bridges and culverts, and may provide for one or more county road commissioners to be elected by the people, or appointed, with such powers and duties as may be prescribed by law," the words "the people" can refer to none other than those of the county.—Board of Road Com'rs of Wayne County v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 148 Mich. 255.

§ 266. ——Interim and provisional designations.

Executive power to appoint to vacancy in superior court, see ante ¶ 212a.

Interim or provisional appointment of local officers by or under state authority, see ante § 75.
Vacancy appointments of state officers, see Const., art. VI, § 10.
Appointment in lieu of suspended or removed officer, see Const., art. IX, § 5.
Grant of power to provide by law for filling vacancies, see Const., art. XVI, § 5.

¶ 1151. Const. art. 6, § 22, providing that whenever, by a change in the boundaries of a township a justice of the peace shall be placed without the same, he shall be deemed to have vacated his office, it was held that it was not competent for the legislature to provide, in organizing a city from portions of two townships, that the justices of the peace previously elected in the townships, but residing within the limits of the new city, should remain in the office until the expiration of the term for which they were elected.—People ex rel. Berry v. Geddes, 3 Mich. 70.

¶ 1152. Const., art. 4, § 37, which provides that the legislature may "declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in the constitution," refers to the mode of filling such vacancy, and not to the term of the appointee.—Attorney General v. Trombly, 89 Mich. 50.

¶ 1153. Vacancies in the office of judge of probate are to be filled by the governor's appointment (Const., art. 6, § 14). A circuit court commissioner was authorized by R. S. 1846 (ch. 91, § 16) to act as judge of probate while the vacancy lasted. Held, that the statute did not conflict with the constitution, and that it applied also to cases in which the judge was temporarily disqualified by interest, relationship, sickness or absence.—Kelley v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 210.

¶ 1154. Upon the adoption of a constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to provide for the election of more than one circuit judge in a certain circuit, it is competent for the legislature to create at once an additional judgeship, which office becomes vacant as soon as created, whether the act so declares or not; and the legislature may authorize the governor to fill such office by appointment until the next general election; but a statute (Laws 1889, Act No. 97) providing that the term of the governor's appointee shall not expire until a certain date beyond such election is void.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408.

¶ 1155. Laws of 1857, Act No. 167 (How. St. § 667), which provides that, in case a vacancy in a county office is filled by appointment by the governor, the appointee shall hold the office during the unexpired portion of the regular term limited to such office, unless the appointment is sooner revoked or determined by the governor, is unconstitutional, in that it undertakes to deprive the electors of a county of their constitutional right to elect for such unexpired term.—Attorney General v. Trombly, 89 Mich. 50.

¶ 1156. The legislature in creating a new school district has no power to designate its officers for more than a temporary term, and the provision of Local Acts 1901, No. 315, creating a new district and naming its officers for terms of one, two and three years respectively is without authority, but officers may be elected under the general law to fill the offices and hence the act is not invalid.—Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 131 Mich. 639, affirmed in 199 U. S. 233, 50 L. ed. 167, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

§ 267. ——Presidential electors.

¶ 1157. The Michigan Act of May 1, 1891, relating to the election of presidential electors and providing that the manner of appointment shall be the election of an elector and an alternate elector in each of the twelve congressional districts into which the state is divided, and of an elector and an alternate elector at large in each of the districts defined by the act, does not contravene the provisions of the second clause of section one of Article II of the Federal Constitution, providing that each state shall "appoint" in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in congress, since the Constitution recognizes that the people act through their representatives in the legislature, and leaves it to the legislature exclusively to define the method of effecting the object.—McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3, affirming 92 Mich. 377.

¶ 1158. Const. U. S., art. 2, § 1, so far as it allows the legislatures of the states to direct the appointment of presidential electors in any other manner than by the voters of the state at large, is not impliedly repealed by Const. U. S., amend. 14 and 15.—McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377, affirmed 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3.

¶ 1159. Laws 1891, Act No. 50, providing for the election of presidential electors, cannot be regarded as invalid because it does not provide for filling a vacancy should both an elector and his alternate die.—McPherson v. Secretary of State, 92 Mich. 377, affirmed 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3.

§ 268. Duties and compensation of officers.
Legislative or local power to fix salaries, see ante § 76.
Rights in office covered by due process clause, see ante § 140.
Alteration of salaries as impairment of contract, see ante § 173.
Character of office, state or local, see Officers, I.
County liability for fees and compensation of services, see Counties, IV.

Salaries of circuit judges and additional compensation by counties, see Const., art. VII, § 12.
Prohibition as to increase during term, see Const., art. XVI, § 3.

¶ 1160. The legislature has power to direct what officer shall bring any class of public actions, and what shall be done with sums collected therein.—Township of Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 Mich. 472.

¶ 1161. The legislature has no power, under the constitution, to clothe one or two supervisors of a county with authority to name a tribunal which shall have the right to assume and perform the duties devolving, under the law, upon the board itself.—Zimmer v. Board Sup'rs Bay Co., 159 Mich. 213.

¶ 1162. Under the constitution of 1850, and prior to the present organization of the Supreme Court, the office of judge of the Supreme Court was not a distinct office from that of circuit judge, but two sets of duties were attached to one office under the latter designation. And the salary of the circuit judges, as fixed by the constitution, was a remuneration for all duties attached to the office, and could not be increased by the legislature.—People ex rel. Whipple v. Auditor-General, 5 Mich. 198.

¶ 1163. Comp. L. 1871, § 535, How. St., § 558, empowered boards of supervisors to fix the compensation of the prosecuting attorney from time to time. Laws 1879, Act No. 154, provided that annual salaries should be fixed by the board on or before the 31st of October, before the officers' terms began, and should not be changed during the term. Held, that this would not prevent a board which had fixed a salary before Act 154 was passed from changing it for the second year of the prosecuting attorney's term. Such a construction does not make the act retrospective.—Knappen v. Barry County Sup'rs, 46 Mich. 22.

¶ 1164. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 171, providing compensation for the several state officers constituting the board of state auditors at $1,800 annually for services not contemplated by the constitution and reimbursement for traveling expenses, is unconstitutional as an attempt to raise the salaries of the secretary of state, the state treasurer and the state land office commissioner contrary to Const., art. 9, § 1, in which such salaries are specifically fixed. These officers are required to perform such duties as are prescribed by law (Const., art. 1, § 8) and ex officio comprising the board of state auditors are required to examine and adjust all claims against the state not otherwise provided for by general law (art. 8, sec. 4); and no duties have been imposed upon such board except such as are directly within the constitutional provision or germane to the duties of the office.—Warner v. Auditor General, 129 Mich. 648.

¶ 1165. The term "salary" as used in the Const., art. 6, § 6, has the same meaning as in section 1 of article 9, and contemplates "a fixed annual or periodical payment for services depending upon the time, and not upon the amount of services rendered." The salaries provided for therein are to be fixed and determined in advance, and when so fixed, each of the circuit judges in the particular county is equally entitled thereto.—Beach v. Kent, 142 Mich. 347.

¶ 1166. Under the Constitution of 1909, art. XVI, § 3, the salaries of public officers, except circuit judges, where the term is fixed by law, may not be increased directly during the term of appointment or indirectly after resignation of the officer and subsequent reappointment.—Kearney v. Board of State Auditors, 189 Mich. 666; Horton v. Board of State Auditors, 189 Mich. 666.

¶ 1167. A public office which does not carry a salary at the time of a person's election or appointment is within section 3, art. XVI, of the Constitution of 1909, prohibiting the increase of salaries of public officers during their terms of office.—Barrus v. Engle, 186 Mich. 540.

§ 269. ——Compensation of legislators.

¶ 1168. Under Const., art. 4, §§ 15, 17, the speaker of the house of representatives cannot, as speaker, receive any compensation or mileage beyond what he receives as a representative.—People ex rel. Thurber v. Whittemore, 2 Mich. 306.

§ 270. Fixing and changing term.

Provisions as to commencement of terms, see Const., art. XVI, § 1.

¶ 1169. The provision of the Detroit justices' act that justices elected thereunder shall hold office "for four years" does not shorten the term and thereby contravene Const., art. 6, § 17, which provides that justices of the peace shall hold their offices four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified; for, there being no statutory prohibition, a justice elected for four years would hold over until, etc.—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654.

¶ 1170. Local Acts 1901, No. 437, providing for biennial instead of annual elections in the city of Detroit and abolishing one election is not invalid as extending the term of existing officers an unreasonable time in that they continue in office another year until the election takes place, and that this amounts to a legislative appointment.—Common Council of Detroit v. Schmidt, 128 Mich. 379.

¶ 1171. The proviso in Local Acts 1895, No. 294, extending the term of the Wayne county treasurer elected in November, 1894, for six months after the term for which the then incumbent was elected, although of doubtful validity, does not control the act so as to render it void, as the requirement that a vacancy shall be filled by election is in furtherance of the spirit of self government, and Comp. L. 1897, § 2537, provides, in case of vacancy or disability, for appointment by the supervisors until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.—Hunt ex rel. Snow v. Buhrer, 133 Mich. 107.

§ 271. Removals from office.

Removals of officers, see Officers, V.
General provisions as to impeachments and removals from office, see Const., art. IX, §§ 1-8.

¶ 1172. Comp. L. 1871, § 618 (How. St. § 651), permitting the governor to remove any state or county officer except the state treasurer and judges, held void, because at the time it was adopted the governor had no judicial power under the constitution.—Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392.

¶ 1173. Section 18, c. 29, Act No. 648, Local Acts 1907, giving to the municipal court justice of Kalamazoo exclusive jurisdiction, as against the other justices of the county, of all cases where both parties reside in the city, is not unconstitutional as depriving a constitutional officer of his office, or as so limiting his jurisdiction as to deprive him of the emoluments of said office.—Strifling v. Baden, 155 Mich. 49.

¶ 1174. The charter of the city of Grand Rapids, Tit. 2, § 11, as amended in 1905, authorizing the removal of certain elective and appointive officers by the common council for misconduct in office is not invalid as unauthorized by the Constitution of 1850, art. 12, § 7, which was in effect at the time the charter was adopted.—Hawkins v. Grand Rapids Common Council, 192 Mich. 276.

XIII. SCHOOL AND EDUCATION.

§ 272. In general.

Power of legislature and local self government, see ante § 72.
Alteration of districts as impairment of contract, see ante § 173.
Power over school officers and offices, see ante XII.
Designation of officers and mode of selection, see ante §§ 265, 266.
Police power to prohibit liquor selling affecting schools, see also ante § 108.
Application of self executing provisions of constitution, see generally Schools.
General provisions of the constitution, see Const., art. XI, §§ 1-15.

¶ 1175. Local Acts 1871, No. 408, creating the union school district of the township of Rogers is not unconstitutional because creating too large a district, since Const., art. 13, §§ 4, 5, relating to the establishment and location of primary schools, contains no restriction as to the size of a school district, and it is immaterial that before and after the adoption of the constitution in general statutes provided for the organization of school districts by the people which were not to exceed nine sections in extent.—Board of Supervisors of Presque Isle Co. v. Thompson, 61 Fed. 914.

§ 273. State University and colleges.

Administration of provisions affecting University, see University of Michigan.
Constitutional provisions as to University, see Const., art. XI, §§ 4, 5, 10, 13.

XIV. TAXATION AND REVENUES.

§ 274. Taxing power in general.

All matters relating to the taxing power and the limitations especially applicable to it are treated in Taxes, I.
Respecting general limitations involved in tax laws, see cross-references which follow.
Relative powers of departments, see ante § 47.
Imposing nonjudicial functions on judges or courts, see ante § 39.
Local self government in taxation, see ante §§ 70, 71.
Tax laws as laws impairing contracts, see ante § 178.
Limitation on taxing power of city as impairing its contracts of indebtedness, see ante § 178.
Basis for classification in tax laws, see ante § 215.
Unequal taxation as denial of equal protection of law, see ante § 227.
Retrospective tax and assessment laws, see ante § 240.
Co-existence and distinctness of taxing power and police power, see ante § 99.
Operation of the rule of uniformity and equality, see Taxes, I; and see also Local Improvements, VI.
Delegation of power to local divisions, see ante § 87.
Charge imposed by statute as a license or a tax, see Licenses; Taxes, I.

¶ 1176. The sovereign powers of taxation and police may constitutionally be combined in the same statute.—Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.

§ 275. Use and appropriation of public funds.

Debt limitations, see post §§ 276, 277.
Power to regulate deposits and keeping of public funds, see also ante § 49.
Use in aid of internal improvements, see post §§ 283, 284.
Tax to pay private claim as legislative audit, see post § 280.
Funds or purposes to which taxes and other revenues should be allotted, see Taxes, X, B; Counties, V; Municipal Corporations, XIII; Townships, VII.
Limitations respecting power to create or incur debt, see post XV.

¶ 1177. The action of a board of education in permitting the use of a book in the public schools known as "Readings from the Bible," made up of moral precepts enforcing the Ten Commandments, no instruction being given from the said book, and no note or comment by teachers being allowed, is not in violation of Const., art. 4, § 40, providing that money shall not be appropriated for the benefit of religious sects or societies.—Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560.

¶ 1178. Act No. 261, Pub. Acts 1907, providing for the appropriation of funds to the Michigan Corn Improvement Association, whose membership is limited to "persons actively interested in the improvement of corn," is unconstitutional, and mandamus will not issue to compel the auditor general to include such appropriation in a state tax levy.—Michigan Corn Improvement Ass'n v. Auditor General, 150 Mich. 69.

XV. PUBLIC CONTRACTS AND INDEBTEDNESS AND INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

§ 276. In general; purposes and limitations.

Grants of extra compensation, see post § 278.
Debt limitations on state, see Const., art. X, § 10 et seq.
Debt limitations of counties, see Const., art. VIII, §§ 11, 12.
Bond and debt limitations on municipalities, see Const., art. VIII, §§ 24, 25.

¶ 1179. An act providing that the board of police shall prepare and submit to the city controller an estimate in detail of the expense of maintaining the police department, and that the common council shall raise the same by general tax, is not in conflict with Const., art. 15, § 13, by which the legislature must restrict the power of cities to tax, borrow money, etc.—People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

¶ 1180. Whether Const., art. 15, § 13, requiring the restriction of municipal taxing and debt making power is mandatory in a sense that it would invalidate all charters of municipalities and acts relating thereto, which are wanting in the limitation upon municipal taxation therein required, quære.—People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

§ 277. ——Necessity of approval by electors.

Power of legislature to provide for erection of bridge between townships, see also Bridges, § 29.
Power of local officers under the statutes and the constitution and elections for approval, see Counties, IV; Municipal Corporations, XI; Townships, III; Public Contracts; Municipal Bonds.

¶ 1181. Laws of 1889, Act No. 314, providing for the construction, etc., of stone, etc., roads in Saginaw county, violates Const., art. 10, § 9, which limits the amount which the board of supervisors of a county may borrow or raise by tax for constructing or repairing public buildings, highways, or bridges, in any one year, to the sum of $1,000, unless authorized by vote of the electors.—Davies v. Saginaw County Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 295.

¶ 1182. Const., art. 10, § 9, and Comp. L. 1897, § 2484, subd. 7, empowering the board of supervisors to borrow or raise by taxation $1,000 for public works, but requiring the electors to pass upon any greater sum, does not prohibit the delegation of power by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4051-4056, permitting the board of supervisors to apportion the cost of a line bridge between the two townships alone concerned.—Ionia County Sup'rs v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 134 Mich. 412.

¶ 1183. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306, providing for ordering the building of bridges between townships by boards of supervisors is constitutional and does not require the submission of the matter to the voters of the two townships, as in case of borrowing by the county itself (Const., art. 10, § 9).—Horner v. Board of Supervisors of Ionia County, 147 Mich. 581.

§ 278. Contracts and extra compensation.

Protection of public contracts from impairment by law, see ante §§ 172, 173.
Limiting taxing power as impairment of contracts of indebtedness, see ante § 178.
Prohibition of extra compensation, see Const., art. XVI, § 3.

¶ 1184. A statute providing for the payment of money to accomplish a purpose which the payees have already agreed to perform for a sum fixed by an independent contract is unconstitutional because it is a grant of extra compensation, which is prohibited (Const., art. 4, § 21).—Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477.

¶ 1185. A joint resolution authorizing the contractor in lieu of swamp lands in a given county, appropriated in the payment of his claim, to select an equal number of acres from any state swamp lands in the Lower Peninsula, is not a grant of extra compensation to a state contractor within the prohibition of State Const., art. 4, § 21, notwithstanding a gradation of price of the various swamp lands, where no distinction in price was in force when the resolution was enacted.—Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 134 Mich. 442.

¶ 1186. Under a contract fixing the pay for the construction of a state road at a given number of acres of state swamp land in a given county, then valued at $1.25 per acre, the subsequent substitution of other state swamp land in lieu of land in the particular county is not in violation of Const., art. 4, § 21, which prohibits extra compensation for state contractors although the land substituted is valued at $8.00 per acre at the time of the substitution many years after the making of the contract.—Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 134 Mich. 442.

§ 279. Contracts for state printing, laws or court reports.

Provisions as to state printing, see Const., art. V, § 25.

¶ 1187. A state contract made otherwise than as the constitution requires is not within the protection of the constitutional provision which forbids it to be varied.—People ex rel. Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 Mich. 422.

¶ 1188. The printing of the Supreme Court reports is not printing for the judicial department, and until 1871 it was not included in the "State printing" contract, nor classed as printing "ordered by the legislature" (Const., art. 4, § 22).—People ex rel. Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 Mich. 422.

¶ 1189. It is within the discretion of the legislature to decide whether it will publish such reports at the expense of the state, but its decision will not bind its successors; if so published, it should be done by contract.—People ex rel. Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 Mich. 422.

§ 280. Claims and audits.

Imposing nonjudicial functions by requiring audit of claims, see ante § 40.
Construction of statute for audit to avoid invalidity, see ante § 25.
Provisions against legislative audit of claims, see Const., art. V, § 34.

¶ 1190. The Act of March 25, 1867, enacted that a note recited to have been given by individuals to pay bounties to volunteers was a valid debt against the township of Onondaga, and that the supervisor levy a tax to pay it. Held, that such act was void, as being in effect the auditing of a private claim by the legislature, contrary to Const., art. 4, § 31.—People ex rel. Gale v. Onondaga Supervisor, 16 Mich. 254.

¶ 1191. Laws 1873, Act No. 387, providing for the raising by tax of money to reimburse a township treasurer for a sum paid by him to the township to make good an amount of the public money of which he had been robbed, was void as a legislative audit of a private claim.—Bristol v. Johnson, 34 Mich. 123.

¶ 1192. The joint resolution of the legislature (Pub. Acts 1901, pages 382-385) creating a board of auditors to audit the accounts against the disorganized county of Manitou and to apportion the claims of the former territory of said county, being unconstitutional on the ground of vesting judicial power in the board and precluding claimants from a proper review, was not sustainable on the alleged ground that the act was a legitimate exercise of legislative power to determine what debts a municipality shall pay, and to compel such payments; as Const., art. 4, § 31, denies the legislature the power to audit an account.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 1193. A joint resolution authorizing the contractor in lieu of swamp lands in a given county, appropriated to the payment of his claim, to select an equal number of acres from any state swamp lands in the Lower Peninsula, is not an attempt to audit and allow a private claim within the meaning of Const., art. 4, § 31.—Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 134 Mich. 442.

§ 281. Works of internal improvement.

Character or purpose of improvement as element in determining whether it is an "internal" improvement, see ante § 26, ¶ 128.
Local municipal improvements, see post § 285.
Local highway improvements, see post § 286.
Limitation on local divisions, see post § 282.
Making land grants to encourage private improvements, see post § 283.
Management of ship canal as work of internal improvement, see also Canals ¶ 5.
Inhibitions on engagement in works of internal improvements, see Const., art. X, § 14.

¶ 1194. The constitutional prohibition against engagement by the state in works of internal improvement was violated by Laws 1871, Act No. 414, empowering the governor to appoint commissioners to improve a highway in a township, and authorizing them and their successors similarly appointed to levy the expenses on adjacent lands, and afterward keep the road in repair by tolls and make up the deficiency by taxation.—People ex rel. Hubbard v. Springwells Township Board, 25 Mich. 153.

¶ 1195. The state, being forbidden to engage in works of internal improvement, cannot itself improve its navigable waters.—Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, affirmed in 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; 123 U. S. 297, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117.

¶ 1196. Quære, whether an attempted contract for the removal of sunken logs and other obstructions from navigable waters under Comp. L. 1897, § 2494, is an attempted work of internal improvement when it covers other obstructions than mere regulation of the use of such streams arising from logging operations.—Gainer v. Nelson, 147 Mich. 113.

¶ 1197. The state is prohibited from engaging in drainage as a work of internal improvement.—Kinnie v. Bare, 68 Mich. 625.

¶ 1198. The Drain Law of 1885 does not violate Const., art. 14, § 9, prohibiting the state from engaging in works of internal improvement.—Gillett v. McLaughlin, 69 Mich. 547.

¶ 1199. The general drain laws of this state are constitutional, and the construction of drains thereunder do not contravene the Const., art. 14, § 9, prohibiting the state from engaging in works of internal improvement.

—Attorney General ex rel. Alexander v. McClear, 146 Mich. 45.

¶ 1200. A drain cannot be regarded as a prescribed work of internal improvement because it is so large that it involves the use of a stream, formerly but no longer capable of floating logs, by deepening and widening it.—Smith v. Carlow, 114 Mich. 67.

¶ 1201. Making a drain by cleaning out and deepening a running stream is not a work of internal improvement prohibited by Const., art. 14, § 9.—Brady v. Hayward, 114 Mich. 326.

¶ 1202. A street railway partly within and partly outside of city limits is a "work of internal improvement" within the meaning of Const., art. 14, § 9, which prohibits the state from being a party to, or interested in any work of internal improvement.—Attorney General ex rel. Barbour v. Pingree, 120 Mich. 550.

¶ 1203. A street railway is an "internal improvement" within Const., art. 14, § 9, limiting the power of the state in that matter. —Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

§ 282. ——Power exercised through local divisions.

¶ 1204. In view of the general prohibition of the state from engaging in works of internal improvement (Const., art. 14, § 9) it cannot authorize its cities to engage in works of "local" improvement, or in such works when they are not "acting as agents of and for the state" unless authorization thereto is found in the constitution.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

¶ 1205. Local Acts 1899, No. 338, authorizing the city of Detroit to appoint a commission to acquire, maintain and operate a system of street railways partly within and partly without the city, is void as being in violation of Const., art. 14, § 9, which prohibits the state from being a party to or interested in any work of internal improvement, the legislature having no power to authorize a city to do what the state had no power to do. —Attorney General ex rel. Barbour v. Pingree, 120 Mich. 550.

¶ 1206. The prohibition against the state's engaging in any work of internal improvement (Const., art. 14, § 9) rests upon the municipalities, which are a part of the state, as well as upon the state itself.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

¶ 1207. An agreement in a franchise granted by a city to a street car company, that in consideration of the consent of the company to a low fare, the city should repair, repave and maintain the pavement upon the streets upon which the railway was to be constructed, was not invalid on the ground of the city thereby engaging in a work of internal improvement.—City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 133 Mich. 608.

¶ 1208. Act 323 of 1881, imposing a tax upon specified townships for the purpose of improving the channel of a stream, is void, because it conflicts with the constitutional provision that the state shall not engage in any work of internal improvement unless by granting land therefor.—Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477.

§ 283. ——Appropriation of public lands or property in aid.

¶ 1209. The constitutional provision forbidding the state to engage in works of internal improvement does not invalidate Pub. L. 1883, Act No. 133, in so far as it provides that swamp lands belonging to the state be appropriated to a particular county to aid in improving the channel of a designated stream, reclaiming adjacent lands, and improving their sanitary condition.—Sparrow v. State Land Office Com'r, 56 Mich. 567.

¶ 1210. Statutes appropriating swamp lands for public improvements are not void as engaging the state in works of internal improvement.—State v. Sparrow, 89 Mich. 263.

¶ 1211. A statute which, besides granting swamp lands to improve a river, authorizes a tax to complete such improvement, and in which the purpose of protecting the public health is merely incidental, is void as an attempt to engage the state in a work of internal improvement.—Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 23.

¶ 1212. Local Acts 1897, No. 423, as to the improvement of Maple River, and appropriating to such improvement certain lands bid in to the state for delinquent taxes, and also providing for a tax for such improvement if the lands proved inadequate, is invalid as violating Const., art. XIV, § 9, prohibiting the state from being interested in works of internal improvement, as the lands sought to be appropriated are not lands granted to the state except in a technical sense.—Gibson v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 121 Mich. 49.

§ 284. ——Bonds and indebtedness in aid of railroads, etc.

¶ 1213. A law indirectly engaging in works of internal improvement by authorizing municipal aid to railroads by donation to be raised by tax is invalid.—People ex rel. Bay

City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499; Thomas v. City of Port Huron, 27 Mich. 320.

¶ 1214. A municipal corporation of this state has no authority to issue bonds in aid of a private corporation for building railroads and the legislature cannot under the constitution authorize an issue of such bonds.—Dodge v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 189.

¶ 1215. The Act of March 22, 1869, declaring it to be lawful within prescribed limits as to amount for any city or township—a majority of its electors voting, at a meeting called for that purpose, assenting—to pledge its aid, "by loan or donation, with or without conditions" in the construction of any railroad by a corporation organized under the laws of the state, a donation, by vote of the electors, of a specified amount of city bonds, upon condition that the railroad should have or continue its terminus within the city, or connect within the city limits with a certain other railroad, and that if any citizens of the city should subscribe and pay for any share in the stock of the company the latter should deliver to such citizens bonds to the amount so subscribed and paid for, not exceeding in all the amount of bonds issued by the city to the railroad company; and that citizens should have 30 days after voting of the aid within which to subscribe to such stock, is valid.—Taylor v. City of Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 1008.

¶ 1216. The Act of March 22, 1869, entitled an act to enable any township, city or village to pledge its aid, by loan or donation, to any railroad company now chartered or organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Michigan, in the construction of its road, does not conflict with the state Constitution of 1850.—Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 666, 22 L. ed. 227.

§ 285. Municipal improvements of local character.

Municipal power under the constitution, see Const., art. VIII, §§ 22, 23.

¶ 1217. Const., art. 4, § 38, authorizing the legislature to confer upon municipalities "such powers of a local, legislative and administrative character as they may deem proper," is to be construed with and not in disregard of article 14, section 9, prohibiting engagement in works of internal improvement; and the legislature cannot confer local powers obnoxious to the latter section.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

¶ 1218. It is within the province of the legislature to confer upon municipalities, under proper restrictions, the right to install plants for municipal lighting and to furnish light to their citizens.—Mitchell v. City of Negaunee, 113 Mich. 359.

¶ 1219. While there is a difference between municipal ownership and municipal operation of street railways, there is no constitutional objection to municipal operation which does not apply to municipal ownership.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

¶ 1220. Parks, waterworks, sewers and public lighting systems are not primarily works of "internal improvement," prohibited by Const., art. 14, § 9, to the state and its cities, but have a governmental function, to-wit, that of serving the public health safety and protection; and the improvement of the community is incidental.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

§ 286. Highway improvement.

See also ante ¶ 1194.

General power of legislature as to highways and highway improvements, see Const., art. VIII, §§ 26, 27.

¶ 1221. The constitutional provisions (article 14, § 9) that the state shall not be interested in any work of internal improvement or vacate or alter any road laid out by commissioners of highways, or any street in any city or village, or in any recorded town plat, do not operate to take from the legislature, and confer upon local authorities, the supreme power over the public streets.—Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 110 Mich. 384, affirmed in 171 U. S. 48, 43 L. ed. 67, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732.

¶ 1222. The constitutional power of cities to construct and maintain roads for public travel (implied from Const., art. 11, § 1, and from article 4, section 49, and article 10, section 11) does not extend to the construction of street railway tracks upon their streets for hire.—Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 148 Mich. 71.

XVI. EMINENT DOMAIN AND COMPENSATION.

§ 287. In general.

The nature, occasion and exercise of the right of Eminent Domain will be fully treated in that topic.

For applications of general limitations, such as the "due process" clause, to condemnations of property for public use, see cross-references following.

Distinction from the police power, see ante § 99.

Relative powers of several departments, see ante § 48.

Right to jury, see ante § 192.

¶ 1223. The exaction of money by means of a local assessment to pay for improvements is not an exercise of the right of eminent domain but of the power to tax.—Williams v. Mayor of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Woodbridge v. City of Detroit, 8 Mich. 274.

XVII. TITLES AND ENACTMENT OF STATUTES.

§ 288. In general.

Introduction of bills and votes thereon, see Statutes, I.
Restrictions on local or special laws, see Statutes, II.
Requirements as to titles and description of subject-matter, see Statutes, III.
Requirements as to amending acts, see Statutes, IV.
Initiative and referendum, see Statutes, VIII.
Necessity of two-thirds vote to enact laws creating courts, see Statutes, I.
Initiative and referendum of statutes, see Statutes, VIII.

¶ 1224. Const., art. 4, § 19, recognizes the use of joint resolutions which are given the force of law and used in this state to authorize a single act for a specific occasion.—Olds v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 134 Mich. 442.

XVIII. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS OTHER THAN FOREGOING.

§ 289. Corporations.

Prospective operation of Const. 1909, relating to conferring charters and franchises, see ante § 16.
Due process in laws affecting corporations, see ante §§ 165, 166.
Alteration or amendment or repeal of charters or franchises as impairment of contract, see ante § 172.
Class corporation laws, see ante § 219.
Abridgment of privileges and immunities, effect on corporations, see ante § 230.
Constitutional period for corporate existence, see Corporations, II.
Creation of corporations by joint action of states, see Corporations, II, A.
Inhibition on local special and private acts, see Statutes, II.
Constitutional provisions as to corporations, see Const., art. XII, §§ 1-9.

¶ 1225. The state has the same power to authorize several existing corporations to associate themselves together and organize themselves into a new corporation as it has to incorporate individuals.—State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224.

¶ 1226. An act permitting the creditors of a chartered corporation to enforce their demands by sale of its franchises is remedial only, and does not violate the constitutional prohibition against creating new corporations with the old charter powers.—Attorney General v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94.

¶ 1227. An amendment to a general law that had been embodied in the charter of a private corporation cannot change such charter unless the charter is itself subject to amendment.—Tripp v. Pontiac & Lapeer Plank Road Co., 66 Mich. 1,

¶ 1228. The power reserved to the legislature by Const., art. 15, § 1, to amend or alter the charters of corporations, authorizes any reasonable amendment, regulating the mode in which the franchise granted shall be used and enjoyed, which does not defeat or essentially impair the object of the grant, or take away property or rights which have become vested under a legitimate exercise of the powers granted.—Attorney General v. Looker, 111 Mich. 498, affirmed in 179 U. S. 46, 45 L. ed. 79, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21.

¶ 1229. Where, by legislative authority, the interests of two corporations which had been incorporated, one in 1848, the other in 1850, by special charters that reserved to the legislature the right of amendment, alteration or repeal only after thirty years, came under one management in 1857, under the name and charter of the earlier incorporation, the result was either the formation of a new corporation subject to the constitution of 1850, which reserved generally the right to amend, alter or repeal corporate charters, or else it was a sale to the earlier corporation of the property and franchises of the later one, in which case the thirty-year limitation would expire in 1878; and in either case amendatory legislation in 1879 was valid.—Township of Erin v. Detroit & E. Plank Road Co., 115 Mich. 465.

¶ 1230. That the legislature has power to repeal the charter of a railroad company, and thus to terminate the company's legal existence, does not render valid an exercise of legislative power that is neither necessary nor appropriate to carry into execution any valid power of the state over the conduct of the business of the company.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, reversing 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 1231. The power to alter or amend the charter of a corporation does not extend to the taking of the property of the corporation either by confiscation or by other means; and it does not authorize a statute requiring railroad companies to keep on sale at specified rates less than the maximum rates fixed by the legislature 1,000-mile tickets valid for two years.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, reversing 114 Mich. 460.

¶ 1232. The legislature may prescribe the means of enforcing the constitutional liability of stockholders for labor debts.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 231.

¶ 1233. How. St., § 3208e5 limiting the liability of stockholders in banks to depositors only, does not violate Const., art. 15, § 3, which provides that stockholders shall be liable for all debts, the constitutional provision relating to banks of issue only.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

§ 290. Exemptions and homesteads.

Restriction or change of right to execution as impairment of contract, see ante § 181.
Provisions as to homesteads and exemptions, see Const., art. XIV, §§ 1-4.

¶ 1234. How. St., § 7716, as amended by Laws 1885, Act. No. 159, § 2, subjecting to execution under judgment for purchase price certain personalty generally exempt, is constitutional.—Roberts v. McGur, 82 Mich. 221.

¶ 1235. Mechanic's Lien Law, § 2 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 199), providing for a lien upon property of a married woman if services are performed or material furnished with her knowledge and consent, does not operate to deprive the wife of her homestead rights, under Const., art. 16, § 2, unless a promise in writing signed by her is obtained, and even though the contract for improvements is made with her knowledge and consent.—Jossman v. Rice, 121 Mich. 270.

I. IN GENERAL; WHAT CONSTITUTES.

§ 1. Elements and kinds in general.

Particular acts see also post §§ 2-11.
Nonpayment of costs as criminal contempt, see also post ¶ 71.
Acts also amounting to crimes, such as bribery, obstructing justice, perjury, etc., see Crimes, II; Indictment.
Nature of the proceeding, see post § 18.
Statutes as affirmations of common law powers, see post ¶ 64.
Mode of commencing and carrying on proceedings dependent on character of the contempt, see post § 25 et seq.
Punishment dependent on civil or criminal nature, see post § 39.
Defenses and excuses, see post, II.

¶ 1. Wilful disobedience of an injunction makes one punishable as for a criminal contempt under Comp. L. 1898, § 1098, subd. 3. —Enterprise Foundry Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, Local No. 186, 149 Mich. 31.

¶ 2. To publish of a circuit judge that he was responsible for a severe criticism of the prosecuting attorney which appeared in a report of a grand jury, and that he did it to "get even," constitutes a criminal contempt unless its truth can be shown.—In re Dingley, 182 Mich. 44.

§ 2. Acts or conduct in presence of court.

See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶¶ 1, 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶¶ 1, 2.

¶ 3. The words "immediate view and presence," as used in How. St., § 7234 (subd. 1), are words of limitation, and exclude the idea of constructive presence. Such "immediate view and presence" does not extend beyond the range of vision of the presiding judge, and the term applies only to such contempts as are committed in the face of the court.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

¶ 4. In contempt proceedings against a coroner for presenting a fraudulent claim for an inquest upon the body of an alleged stranger, for allowance by the circuit court, it is immaterial whether or not the order allowing it was entered of record, since the contempt was complete upon the presentation of the claim.—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

§ 3. Misconduct by attorneys or officers.

See also ante ¶ 4.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶¶ 1, 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 3.
Misconduct by jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 8.

¶ 5. Under Comp. L. 1897, ch. 301, § 1, giving courts power to punish "Any neglect or violation of duty or any misconduct by which the rights or remedies of a party in any cause or matter depending in such court or triable therein, may be defeated, impaired, impeded or prejudiced, in the following cases: (1) All * * * coroners * * * for any misbehavior in such office or trust, or for any willful neglect or violation of duty therein," the circuit court may punish a coroner for presenting a bill for an inquest upon the body of a stranger, the expense of which is by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 11828, payable by the state when allowed by the circuit court when in fact the deceased was a local resident, this being a "matter depending in such court."—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

¶ 6. Respondents were attorneys to defend a man accused of murder. They appeared on two occasions and asked for a continuance, and the court refused it, and set a day for trial. On the day set, respondents failed to appear, and sent in another attorney to make a motion for a continuance, and filed besides motions for change of venue, and to disqualify the trial judge. Respondents were in good health, took a trip to Canada, returning four days later. Held, respondents were guilty of contempt of court.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

§ 4. Hindering or evading jurisdiction.

Evading or disobeying subpoena or process, see post § 5.
Tampering with witnesses or jurors, see post § 7.
Disobeying judgment or order, see post §§ 9-11.

¶ 7. One is guilty of contempt who files, in a circuit court other than that having jurisdiction of proceedings under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, a bill to enjoin a sale of the assigned property on the ground that the assignment is invalid; and the question of the assignment's validity will not be tried on an application for mandamus to vacate an order adjudging relator guilty of contempt.—Smith v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 84 Mich. 564.

¶ 8. The sale of property under levy and execution, the property being in the hands of a receiver, made without application to, and leave from the court, is a contempt of court and is illegal and void.—Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 130 Mich. 417.

¶ 9. Where a partnership creditor commenced proceedings in a foreign state to enforce his claim prior to the appointment of a receiver on a bill for the dissolution of the partnership, it was held that such creditor was not in contempt in continuing such proceeding to final judgment although he knew of the appointment of the receiver.—Rickman v. Rickman, 180 Mich. 224.

§ 5. Evasion or disobedience of process or subpoena.

Failure to attend for examination in receivership proceedings, see also post ¶ 32.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶¶ 4, 6, 7, Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶¶ 4, 6, 7.
Failure to attend on subpoena as contempt, see also Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 74; Comp. L. 1915, § 12562.
Arrest in violation of privilege as contempt, see Jud. Act, chap. XIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 12247.
Nonattendance on garnishment as contempt, See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶¶ 4, 6, 7, Comp. L. 1915, § 13147.
Neglect to make return to mandamus, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13437.

¶ 10. Evading by concealment the service of a subpoena on himself is not a contempt which a court of record can punish under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 230, § 8, which after other contemptuous acts were enumerated, reads: "All other cases where attachments and proceedings as for contempts have usually been practiced in courts of record to enforce the civil remedies of any party, or to protect the rights of any such party."—Brodrick v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 274.

¶ 11. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 230, § 4, empowering courts of record to punish for contempt the detaining of any witness, etc., and "any other unlawful interference with the process or proceedings in any action" does not cover the act of one who himself evades the service of a subpoena in an action between others.—Brodrick v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 274.

§ 6. Attacking official conduct of court.

As criminal contempt, see also ante ¶ 2.
Disavowal of bad intent as purgation, see post § 17.
After judgment becomes final and irreversible, see post ¶ 68.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 10.

¶ 12. A letter criticizing a decree, and charging the judge with submitting to private interviews with interested parties in regard to the case pending his decision, and intimating unfairness and partiality upon the hearing, is an attack upon the official conduct of the court, and constitutes a contempt, for which the writer is liable.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

¶ 13. Whether it is a contempt of court to indorse upon a check given to the clerk in payment of a fine for a previous contempt, a statement that such fine is illegal and unjust coupled with a protest, was questioned but left undecided.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

§ 7. Tampering with evidence, witnesses or jurors.

Which court has jurisdiction, see post § 19.

¶ 14. Under How. St., § 7234, which provides among other things that every court of record shall have power to punish as for a criminal contempt, persons guilty of acts tending to interrupt its proceedings, or to impair the respect due its authority, the circuit court may, upon its own motion, punish as for contempt of court, any person attempting to bribe jurors or witnesses in a cause, although no party be aggrieved by such misconduct.—Langdon v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 76 Mich. 358.

¶ 15. To bribe or attempt to bribe a witness in a pending case is a most serious contempt of court and one which should be promptly dealt with, and the fact that it is also a crime does not take away the jurisdiction of the court to punish it as a contempt.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 130 Mich. 187.

¶ 16. An attempt to prevent the attendance as a witness of one who has not yet been subpoenaed is a contempt of court under How. St., § 7257, subd. 4, which provides for the punishment of any person guilty of unlawfully detaining any witness to a suit while going to, remaining at, or returning from the court where such suit shall be noticed for trial.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 486.

§ 8. Refusal to answer as witness.

Excuse of immateriality, see post § 15.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 7.
Before justices, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXIX, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 14446.

¶ 17. Under How. St., §§ 8061, 8063, a principal defendant who refuses to answer interrogatories as to the disposition of notes given him by a garnishee, and which are not in the latter's hands at the time of the service of the writ of garnishment, may be punished for contempt; and it is not necessary to allege that his refusal to answer or his secretion of the facts is fraudulent.—Barnes v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 81 Mich. 374.

¶ 18. A party to a suit in another state cannot be committed in this state for refusing to testify under a commission issued in said state to take his testimony here. Comp. L. 1857, § 4295, How. St., § 7488, applies to general witnesses only.—In re Adams, 7 Mich. 452.

§ 9. Disobedience or violation of order or judgment.

Burden of proof of disobedience or violation, see post § 34.
Delay in complying with order of purgation, see post § 17.
Effect of total or partial invalidity or defect in judgment, see post § 10.
Power to punish by contempt, availability of execution or other means of enforcement, see post §§ 22, 23.
Notice or demand to fix duty and disobedience, see post § 12.
Parties liable, see post § 13.
Excuses, such as poverty, sickness, etc., see post § 15.
Interpretation of the judgment or decree to determine whether obedience has been done, see Injunctions, VI.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶¶ 3, 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶¶ 3, 5.
In judgment creditors' proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIV, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 13386.
Of judgment on award, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13663.
Disobedience by minor courts and officers, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 9.

¶ 19. The failure of a carrier to comply fully and completely with a schedule of freight rates established by the Michigan Railroad Commission, when approved by the court and a writ of mandamus issued to compel the carrier to put such rates into effect, amounts to contempt of court.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac R. Co., 184 Mich. 242.

¶ 20. The imposition by a carrier in the first instance of an additional charge of fifty cents per thousand feet on all shipments of lumber under a tariff established by the Michigan Railroad Commission authorizing it on lumber not intendent for reshipment, held not sufficient to justify the imposition of a penalty on the carrier for failing to comply literally with an order of the court requiring the putting into effect of such tariff, since the terms of the tariff were ambiguous as to the time for making such charge.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 185 Mich. 649.

§ 10. ——Validity and effect of the judgment or order.

Ambiguity in order, see also ante ¶ 20.
Advice of counsel that order was void as excuse, see post § 16.
Exclusion on hearing of questions as to effect or regularity of anterior proceedings, see post § 33.
Record in the injunction case as proof of validity of order, see post § 36, ¶ 115.

¶ 21. There is no legal wrong in violating an order that was made without jurisdiction, but if an order is valid, the punishment for disobeying it will depend on whether such conduct is wilfully contumacious or not.—Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138.

¶ 21a. An injunction, regularly issued, should be obeyed, and the court has power to punish for contempt disobedience thereof, though the proceedings to obtain such injunction were a fraud upon the court.—Holland v. Weed, 87 Mich. 584.

¶ 22. It is not a contempt for a police officer holding a prisoner under arrest to refuse to release him on a void order of release founded on an invalid recognizance.—Couzens v. Sellers, 199 Mich. 457.

¶ 23. In a case brought for divorce against the other spouse, who obtained a divorce in another state (How. St., § 6228 subd. 6), an order for alimony may properly be made over objection that there is no marriage; and nonpayment of such alimony may be punished as a contempt.—Van Inwagen v. Van Inwagen, 86 Mich. 333.

¶ 24. The fact that the case stands on a plea, which if true shows nonexistence of the marriage, does not make the order for alimony lacking in jurisdiction; hence contempt for nonpayment lies.—Filer v. Filer, 77 Mich. 469.

¶ 25. Contempt proceedings based on the noncompliance with a void order of the circuit court relative to a ruling of the Railroad Commission, are of no force.—Briggs v. Cass Circuit Judge, 178 Mich. 28.

¶ 26. The violation of a preliminary injunction in a patent case is not excused because the patent is invalid nor because the writ may have been improvidently granted. Such a writ must be obeyed until legally dissolved where the court issuing it had jurisdiction.—Phillips v. Detroit, 2 Flip, 92, Fed. Cas. No. 11101.

¶ 27. Where a decree of a supreme court directs that a trustee of a fund present her claim for costs and expenses to the lower court, and she considers herself aggrieved by the allowance there made by a decree, though taking the trust fund as therein directed, and afterwards refuses to distribute the trust fund as provided in the said decree, desiring to appeal from the allowance, but declaring no appealable order was entered, having accepted the fund upon direction of the court the trustee is not in a position to question the form of the order and ignore it as not final.—Ladies of the Modern Maccabees v. Daley, 173 Mich. 577.

¶ 28. Where the decree has not been enrolled but is subject to modification upon motion, where costs have not been taxed or execution issued, and where rehearing may be ordered or an appeal taken, the case cannot be said to have reached a stage where it is not pending in the circuit court so far as the right to punish for contempt is concerned.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

§ 11. ——Suspension or discharge of the order or judgment.

Power to punish vilification of court after judgment becomes final, see also post § 20, ¶ 68.

(1 Mich. Dig. 71.)

¶ 29. One will not be punished for disobeying an injunction which the parties have previously stipulated shall be dissolved, even though an order vacating the writ is needed to complete the record.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 30. A suit for divorce was brought against relator and the court ordered him to pay temporary alimony and also a fee to the wife's solicitor, but before the latter was paid or any demand made therefor, the parties became reconciled and the suit was discontinued. The solicitor demanded payment of the fee and brought contempt proceedings against the husband and the court adjudged him in contempt. Held that such order should be vacated as the court had no power to make it.—Dillon v. Shiawassee Circuit Judge, 131 Mich. 574.

¶ 31. The death of complainant's husband, who, with another person, had been made defendant in a bill for divorce and for restraint from disposition of fraudulently transferred property until a bill for divorce is maintainable, does not, at least where it occurs after a violation of the injunction by the other defendant, abate the suit retained as an injunction suit, so as to relieve the latter from liability to punishment for contempt.—Smith v. Waalkes, 109 Mich. 16.

¶ 32. A contention that a defendant for whom a receiver has been appointed cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt for failure to attend hearing for examination, pending the hearing of his petition to stay the receivership proceedings, cannot be sustained where there is no temporary stay preventing the complainant from proceeding to a hearing before the circuit court commissioner.—Central Nat. Bank of Cleveland v. Graham, 118 Mich. 488.

§ 12. Notice or demand to fix contempt.

Duty of counsel to attend on court without special notice, see Indictment, IX, A.

Necessity of personal service of notice to put party in contempt of Supreme Court order, see Sup. Ct. Rule 21.

¶ 33. A commitment for nonpayment of money under Comp. L. 1857, § 4077, How. St., § 7260, must be preceded by demand and refusal to pay.—Brown v. Brown, 22 Mich. 299; Edison v. Edison, 56 Mich. 185.

¶ 34. Previous demand for payment is not required where the party had declared he would not pay.—Potts v. Potts, 68 Mich. 492.

¶ 35. One who has been ordered to execute, acknowledge and deliver a deed containing a special covenant of warranty cannot be held guilty of contempt in disobeying such decree until such deed has been presented to him for execution, and he has refused; he is not bound at his peril to prepare it.—Berry v. Innes, 35 Mich. 189.

§ 13. Parties in contempt; privity and participation.

Joining with company of strikers with good intent, see also post ¶ 40.

¶ 36. Proceedings for contempt in not paying over a fund are not appropriate to try issues involving the title to the fund arising on a garnishment of it by one who was not a party to the proceeding out of which the contempt proceeding arose.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 119.

¶ 37. Upon the evidence both of two defendants were adjudged to have been guilty of contempt in violating an injunction by digging a drain.—Rummell v. Lamb, 110 Mich. 685.

¶ 38. A decree enjoining defendant from diverting water from a lake and requiring him to fill up a ditch through which the water was diverted, in two places, does not impose upon him a continuing duty so as to render him guilty of contempt because strangers without his knowledge removed the dams placed in the ditch.—Stock v. Township of Jefferson, 132 Mich. 96.

¶ 39. A decree enjoined defendant from diverting water from a lake and required him to fill up a ditch at two points, which was done, but the dams so constructed were shortly thereafter removed by parties unknown. Held, that defendant was not guilty of contempt for this act done by strangers without his privity or consent.—Stock v. Township of Jefferson, 132 Mich. 96.

II. DEFENSES, EXCUSES AND PURGATION.

§ 14. In general; justification.

Invalidity of order or defect therein as justification, see also ante § 10.

Suspension of judgment or discharge of it as justification, see also ante § 11.

Acquittal of civil contempt as bar to criminal, see Former Adjudication, III.

¶ 40. A person who in company with a hostile crowd of union men, followed and addressed a nonunion man, is guilty of contempt as having violated a decree of the court enjoining the union men of a company from interfering with the company's business; and a claim that his purpose was to peacefully solicit the nonunion man to join the union, is no justification when the act took place at a time and under such circumstances that peaceful solicitation was impossible.—Ideal Mfg. Co. v. Ludwig, 149 Mich. 699; In re Hamlyn, 149 Mich. 699.

§ 15. Excuses generally; good intent.

Acts done by strangers, see ante § 12.

Ambiguity in order disobeyed, see also ante ¶ 20.

Good purpose to accomplish impossible object, see also ante ¶ 40.

Injunction procured by fraud on court, see also ante ¶ 21a, post ¶ 135.

Official character of contemnor as relieving him from personal liability to indemnify other party, see post ¶ 141.

Disavowal of bad intent as purging contempt, see post § 17.

Excuse for delay in complying with order of purgation, see post § 17.

Sufficiency of excusing affidavit, see post § 36, ¶ 117.

¶ 41. Poverty, sickness and unfavorable weather may sufficiently excuse the failure to promptly comply with a decree requiring the removal of a building.—Scott v. Layng, 59 Mich. 43.

¶ 42. An order committing a male minor for contempt in refusing to comply with an order for payment of alimony, is erroneous where such minor has no property of any kind and has never been emancipated.—Austin v. Austin, 167 Mich. 164.

¶ 43. The fact that a witness, summoned to produce books before a grand jury, is not under investigation himself, will not excuse him from punishment for contempt on the ground that the evidence is immaterial and incompetent as it cannot be said that the books cannot be used against others.—In re Archer, 134 Mich. 408.

¶ 44. An attachment for contempt of court in failing to pay over temporary alimony to the wife during the pendency of a divorce suit is proper where the husband is in default, even though he has been put into involuntary bankruptcy, has been adjudged a bankrupt, the assignees in bankruptcy have taken charge of his property and he claims to be unable to pay the alimony, and has no means of earning any money, except as he is employed as a clerk for the assignees in bankruptcy, and that his compensation for such services has not been fixed.—Schroeder v. Schroeder, How. N. P. 63.

§ 16. Advice of counsel.

Effect to mitigate punishment or fine, see post § 40.

Purgation where disobedience was on advice of counsel, see post § 17.

¶ 45. That a party has acted under advice of counsel in violating an injunction will not relieve him from paying the actual damage sustained from such violation.—Chapel v. Hull, 60 Mich. 167.

¶ 46. Where a decree of the Supreme Court directs that the trustee of a fund present her claim for costs and expenses to the lower court, and she considers herself aggrieved by the allowance there made by a decree, though taking the trust fund as therein directed, and afterwards refuses to distribute the trust fund as provided in said decree, desiring to appeal from the allowance, but claiming no appealable order was entered, if she acted in accordance with advice of counsel she is not guilty of contempt.—Ladies of the Modern Maccabees v. Daley, 173 Mich. 577.

§ 17. Purgation and discharge.

Discharge on payment of judgment, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 12280.

¶ 47. One guilty of publishing a report of a judicial proceeding, the only fair construction of which tends to defame and degrade the court in the eyes of the litigants and the public, cannot purge himself of the contempt by a denial of any intended wrong, and an assertion that he meant the publication to bear a different and harmless construction.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

¶ 48. In answer to an order to show cause why they were not guilty of contempt in the use of certain language in a respondents' brief, the respondents disclaimed any intent to use language which could be construed as contempt, and the court, though the language was improper, took no further action.—In re Jones and Clink, 120 Mich. 517.

¶ 49. A carrier which acts on the advice of reputable counsel in failing to comply literally with an order of the Michigan Railroad Commission establishing a schedule of freight rates, which have been upheld by the court and a writ of mandamus issued requiring the carrier to put them into operation, will be permitted to purge its contempt by forthwith putting such schedule into effect.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac R. Co., 184 Mich. 242.

¶ 50. The failure of a carrier to comply with an order of the court permitting it to purge itself from a contempt by filing with the Michigan Railroad Commission a freight tariff within five days after service of such order, held excused by negotiations between the carrier and the Commission tending to effect a settlement of the controversy.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 185 Mich. 649.

III. PROCEDURE AND PUNISHMENT AND INDEMNITY FOR INJURY.

§ 18. Nature of the proceeding.

Nature and kinds of contempts, see ante § 1.
As determining the punishment, see post § 39.
Inapplicability of provisions against imprisonment for debt, see post § 41.
Resort to contempt against officer as barring other remedy, see Sheriffs, VI.
Application of due process clause to statutes fixing contempt procedure, see Constitutional Law, § 142.

¶ 51. A proceeding to punish for contempt of court is not a criminal cause triable by jury.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

¶ 52. Contempt proceedings are criminal in their nature rather than civil.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 53. Contempt proceedings are special summary proceedings, and a proceeding to punish for a criminal contempt is entirely independent and distinct from the suit in which the contempt is committed.—In re Smith, 144 Mich. 39.

§ 19. Power and jurisdiction of courts.

See also ante ¶ 14.
Inherent power of courts of record, see post § 20.
Contempts also amounting to crimes, see ante ¶ 15.
Affidavits or petition as conferring jurisdiction, see post ¶ 84.
Institution on court's own motion, see post § 32.
Sentences by justices of the peace, see also post § 38.
Power of judge to sit and disqualification to sit, see Judges, II, III.
Legislative power to regulate contempt procedure and punishment, see Constitutional Law, § 63.
Transfer of jurisdiction by error or appeal, see Appeal, IX.
Disobedience after dismissal of bill and appeal, see also Appeal, ¶ 599.
Effect of stay on appeal as transferring jurisdiction in part leaving other part to court below, see also Stay of Proceedings, II.
Power of examining magistrate to commit witness for refusal to testify, see also Arrest, ¶ 89.
General power under the statutes, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268.
Power of probate courts to punish for contempts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13765.
Power of justices and occasions for exercise, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXIX, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 14442.

¶ 54. Under Pub. Acts 1875, No. 49, §§ 13, 14 (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 630, 631), which, after defining the jurisdiction of the superior court of Grand Rapids, gives it "power to issue all lawful writs and process, and do all lawful acts which may be necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers and jurisdiction given by this act, and especially to issue all writs and process and to do all acts which the circuit courts of this State, within their respective jurisdictions may in like cases issue and do by the laws of the state of Michigan," said superior court has the same power to punish for contempts as the circuit courts have under the constitution.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 130 Mich. 187.

¶ 55. An executor is a "person," within Comp. L. 1915, § 13765, providing that each probate judge shall have power to issue warrants for the apprehension and imprisonment of "any person" who shall refuse or neglect to perform any order, sentence or decree of a probate court, and a warrant of commitment is not illegal as in violation of § 12819, providing that execution "shall not issue against the body, nor against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of any executor," unless in those cases provided by law.—In re Merrill, 200 Mich. 244.

¶ 56. Comp. L. 1897, chap. 301, giving jurisdiction, relates to "Proceedings as for Contempt to Enforce Civil Remedies," and does not apply to contempts in criminal proceedings.—In re Emery, 149 Mich. 383; City of Eaton Rapids v. Horner, 126 Mich. 52; In re Osborn, 131 Mich. 118.

¶ 57. Comp. L. 1897, § 1098, relating to criminal contempts, does not confer upon the circuit court the power to punish for contempt an interference with the people's witnesses on a preliminary examination pending before a justice of the peace, but by its terms excludes such authority.—In re Emery, 149 Mich. 383.

¶ 58. The circuit court has not the power to punish as a contempt an interference with the people's witnesses on a preliminary examination before a magistrate on a criminal charge, since such examination is not a matter depending or triable in the circuit court, but is for the purpose of determining whether an offense has been committed which would be triable in the circuit court.—In re Emery, 149 Mich. 383.

¶ 59. A decree entered by the Supreme Court requiring the defendants to remove poles, wires, etc., from the streets of a city and remanding the cause to the circuit court, under Comp. L. 1897, § 554, providing for remission of all files to the circuit court and for further proceedings necessary to enforce the decree, cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings in the Supreme Court on an original application where the circuit court has rendered the matter res adjudicata by acquitting the parties of the charge on petition for contempt in that court.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Horner, 126 Mich. 52.

¶ 60. Contempt proceedings were not properly brought in the Supreme Court against a board of canvassers who, after the affirmance on certiorari of mandamus proceedings to compel the issuance of a certificate of election, issued a certificate contrary to the order of the circuit court; as the circuit court had jurisdiction of the case and hence of the contempt proceedings.—Fitzsimmons v. Board of Commissioners of Detroit, 119 Mich. 147.

¶ 61. Under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 340, § 5, the enforcement of provisions for support contained in a decree for divorce, which are intended to be temporary, and to continue only until the decree for permanent alimony is complied with, rests with the circuit court until the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court attaches, which does not occur in such cases until the return is filed in said court.—Delor v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 157 Mich. 587.

¶ 62. Under How. St., §§ 8115, 8116, being sections 9 and 10 of the statute authorizing proceedings at law in the nature of a judgment creditor's bill, and which authorizes the "judge" to punish for contempt in the same manner as the circuit court might, the circuit court as well as the judge has power to punish as for contempt a debtor who refuses to appear before a circuit court commissioner, and make discovery on oath concerning his property, pursuant to the provisions of said act.—Shepard v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 606.

¶ 62a. The contention of the defendant in contempt proceedings, based on defendant's failure to appear before a circuit court commissioner and give testimony in receivership proceedings, that, until the commissioner had before him proof of service of the order appointing a receiver, such commissioner had no authority to issue the summons requiring defendant to appear will be ineffective against the order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt when the order appointing the receiver directed the commissioner to issue a summons on request and a copy of such order was before the commissioner.—Central Nat. Bank v. Graham, 118 Mich. 488.

§ 20. ——Inherent power to punish.

Statutory confirmation of inherent power, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 11.

¶ 63. Power to punish for contempt is inherent in, and as ancient as, courts themselves.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

¶ 64. Courts of record in this state have the same inherent power to hear and determine all contempts of court that the superior courts of England had at the common law. The statutes (How. St., § 7234 and chap. 256) are in affirmation of this power, and regulate procedure and punishment without curtailing it.—Langdon v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 76 Mich. 358.

¶ 65. Under Const. 1850, art. VI, § 1, providing that "The judicial power is vested in one Supreme Court, in circuit courts, in probate courts and in justices of the peace. Municipal courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction may be established by the legislature in cities" and article VI, sections 13, 18, providing that the jurisdiction and duties of probate and justices' courts may be limited and prescribed by the legislature, and section 8 providing that "The circuit courts shall have jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, not excepted in this Constitution and not prohibited by law," the circuit courts have inherent power to punish for contempts which are not subject to control by the legislature.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 130 Mich. 187.

¶ 66. The right of a court to punish as for a criminal contempt is no longer an open question, and while power to do so is conferred by Comp. L. 1897, § 1098, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 12589, courts possess it independently thereof.—In re Dingley, 182 Mich. 44.

¶ 67. Under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 194, a magistrate had no power to commit a witness for refusing to testify on the preliminary examination of a person charged with crime. —In re Farnham, 8 Mich. 89.

¶ 68. The power of a court of record to punish for contempt persons guilty of vilifying the court in its judicial character is not limited to contempts arising out of pending proceedings where the judgment is still subject to modification on motion.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

§ 21. Power of nonjudicial bodies.

¶ 69. A board of supervisors has power to subpoena witnesses (Comp. L. 1871, § 469) but cannot arrest or commit them for contempt in refusing to appear.—In re Blue, 46 Mich. 268.

§ 22. Contempt for nonpayment of money; availability of execution.

Mode of procedure, see also post ¶ 85.

¶ 70. Process for contempt to enforce civil remedies cannot be resorted to where there is other adequate remedy, such as execution. —Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138; North v. North, 39 Mich. 67.

¶ 71. One cannot be punished as for a criminal contempt because of his noncompliance with an order for the payment of costs, where, if the payment of costs had been made one of the conditions of the order and a part of the judgment in case of noncompliance, an execution could have been awarded for them.—Swartout v. Lucas, 102 Mich. 492.

¶ 72. Where execution may issue to collect a decree for the payment of money, contempt proceedings cannot be resorted to to enforce the civil remedy.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 73. The fact that a void execution has been taken against a wife to enforce a decree in a divorce suit, and a void and ineffectual levy made does not affect subsequent contempt proceedings brought against her for the enforcement of the decree as one "where by law execution cannot be awarded"; where no benefit has been derived from it by the husband and no injury suffered by the wife.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 74. A decree entered in a divorce suit ordering the wife to pay over to the husband the proceeds of a trust fund which she has in her control, but which is outside the jurisdiction of the court, is not a decree for the payment of money in the ordinary sense; and since the property is not subject to the exemption law, and the decree requires the delivery of the specific thing, it is not enforceable by a writ of execution, and it is therefore enforceable by contempt proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, § 10891, giving that remedy where by law execution cannot be awarded. —Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 75. Where a husband had assigned to his trustee in bankruptcy a sum awarded him in a divorce proceeding, which his wife was found to hold in trust for him and directed to pay, the fact of the bankruptcy proceedings does not change the wife's obligation to a mere debt, and make the debt one enforceable only by execution; and therefore not by contempt.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

§ 23. ——Noncompliance with alimony orders.

Which court has jurisdiction, see ante § 19.
Disobedience amounting to contempt, see ante §§ 9-11.
Divorce decrees other than for payment of alimony, see ante § 22.
Necessity of previous notice and demand, see ante § 12.
Necessity of hearing and opportunity for defense, see post § 81.

Excuse of poverty or inability to comply, see ante § 15.
Sufficiency of record in divorce proceeding to sustain commitment as one based on valid judgment, see post ¶ 124.
See Jud. Act, chap. V, § 1, ¶ 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12268, ¶ 5.

¶ 76. Process of attachment as for contempt, though not allowable where there is any other adequate remedy, lies to enforce obedience to an order requiring payment of temporary alimony and expenses of litigation. Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138; Palmer v. Palmer, 45 Mich. 150.

¶ 77. Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 230, giving the court the power to punish for contempt for disobedience or refusal to pay alimony is retroactive, being remedial.—Judd v. Judd, 125 Mich. 228.

¶ 78. The payment of alimony may be enforced by contempt proceedings under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 230, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12614.—Mesler v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 188 Mich. 195.

¶ 79. An order for the maintenance of children falls within the term "alimony," and such order may be enforced through imprisonment for contempt under Pub. Acts 1899, Act. No. 230, which is amendatory to Comp. L. 1897, § 10891.—Brown v. Brown, 135 Mich. 141.

¶ 80. The defendant was ordered in a decree of divorce made in Oklahoma, to pay the complainant certain alimony. Complainant brought a bill to enforce this decree in Michigan. Held, that Act No. 230, Pub. Acts 1899, giving courts power to punish as for contempt a refusal to comply with a decree to pay alimony, conferred no authority to punish defendant for contempt under the present proceeding.—Mayer v. Mayer, 154 Mich. 386.

§ 24. Who may institute proceedings.
Action on court's own motion, see post § 32.
Right of counsel to enforce alimony decree, see also ante ¶ 30.
Right of trustee in bankruptcy to join in contempt proceeding to reach assets, see also Bankruptcy, ¶ 101.

¶ 81. Contempt proceedings (How. St., chap. 256) to enforce a civil remedy cannot be instituted on the petition of a nonresident corporation which has not been served with process and has not voluntarily appeared in the suit; since a party which has not submitted itself to the jurisdiction cannot ask relief at the hands of the court.—Latimer v. Barmore, 81 Mich. 592.

§ 25. How commenced; affidavit.
Sufficiency of facts shown, see post § 27.

¶ 82. Contempts not committed in the "immediate view and presence" of the court must be brought before it by the affidavits of the persons who witnessed them, or have knowledge of their commission; and a rule is entered, based upon such affidavits, either that an attachment issue, or that the accused show cause at a certain time and place why he should not be punished for the alleged contempt.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

¶ 83. During an adjournment of court an attorney gave to the clerk, in payment of a fine imposed for a previous contempt of court, a certified check indorsed with a statement that the fine was illegal and unjust. Held, that the contempt, if any, not being committed "in the immediate view and presence" of the court, was not punishable summarily, but only in proceedings based upon affidavit and notice.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

¶ 84. In a proceeding under Comp. L. 1897, § 10891, for contempt of court in intimidating witnesses, in which a petition was filed based upon information and belief and accompanied by affidavits, the affidavits and not the petition conferred jurisdiction, and without the affidavits the proceeding would have been quashed.—Russell v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 624.

§ 26. Notice or order to show cause.
Appearance as equivalent, see post § 29.
Interrogatories on order, see post § 30.
Sufficiency of proof of knowledge of order disobeyed, see post § 36.
Occasions for order to show cause, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12272.
Necessity for personal service, see 1916 C. C. Rule 12, § 1.

¶ 85. The sole purpose of Comp. L. 1915, § 13765, providing that each judge of probate shall have power to issue warrants for the apprehension and imprisonment of any person who shall refuse or neglect to obey any of its orders, is the enforcement of the orders, decrees and sentences of the probate court, and notice before issuance of the warrant, or an order to show cause why it should not issue before issuance is not required.—In re Merrill, 200 Mich. 244.

§ 27. Showing for attachment.
Sufficiency of showing against attachment, see also post ¶ 117.
Sufficiency of proof of the contempt, see post § 36.
Of notice and demand for payment of money, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 12271.

¶ 86. The return of a master charged with the execution of an order of the court showing the failure of a person to appear and submit to an examination as required by the order is sufficient foundation for a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for contempt.—Whipple v. Brown, H. 436.

¶ 87. The rule which requires that the charges against a party alleged to have been guilty of contempt must be supported by positive statements, in affidavits made by persons having knowledge of the facts, does not exclude the drawing of inferences by the circuit judge from established facts, and his decision as to whether there was a sufficient basis for issuing an order to show cause can only be reversed in case of a total absence of a showing of facts justifying such action. —Montgomery v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 436.

¶ 88. Affidavits used on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds of which was the alleged action of an officer of the defendant corporation, in whose favor judgment had been rendered, in inducing witnesses for plaintiff to leave the state during the trial of the cause, may be made the basis of proceedings against the offending officer for contempt.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 436.

¶ 89. Affidavits tending to show that a coroner presented a claim to the circuit court for an inquest, including charges for a post mortem, with a certificate that the deceased was a stranger not belonging in the state, and that deceased was in fact a resident, who had been removed from his home to a hospital and died there, and that no post mortem was held, present a prima facie case of misconduct which would warrant the commencement of contempt proceedings.—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

§ 28. Issuance of attachment and arrest.

When affidavits or notice are prerequisite, see ante §§ 25, 26.

For failure to return process, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12273.

Arrest and custody of contemnor, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 12, 13; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12279, 12280.

Return of attachment and compulsion of return, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 12284.

Discharge or liberation on bail, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 13-15; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12280-12282.

Habeas corpus to bring person before court, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 7-9; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12274-12276.

¶ 90. An attachment issued by the register without any previous order of court is void. An express order of the court, based upon showing and authorizing the register to send out the writ, is required.—Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 Mich. 719; In re Simons, 49 Mich. 511.

¶ 91. An attachment issued by the register upon affidavits is void. An express order of court is necessary.—Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 Mich. 719; In re Simons, 49 Mich. 511.

§ 29. Appearance and bond.

Appearance in action as prerequisite to right to institute contempt proceedings ancillary thereto, see ante ¶ 81.

Alias attachment for nonappearance, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12292.

Bond to appear, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 10, 11; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12277, 12278.

Liability on bond for appearance, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 27-30; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12294-12297.

¶ 92. Where attorneys are cited for contempt for acts committed outside the presence of the court, formalities of procedure are waived by their voluntary appearance to answer the charge.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

§ 30. Interrogatories.

¶ 93. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 198-203, and the 1897 C. C. Rules 50-57 do not abrogate the usual proceedings for contempt in courts of chancery, and Comp. L. 1897, § 10909, requiring interrogatories, etc., applies to such proceedings.—Metheany v. Kent Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 628.

¶ 94. Contempt proceedings in chancery are fatally defective, where the statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 10909), requiring interrogatories to be filed where the defendant has been brought into and has appeared before the court which interrogatories must specify the facts and circumstances alleged against the defendant and require an answer thereto, has not been complied with.—Metheany v. Kent Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 628.

¶ 95. One who is charged with contempt in a chancery proceeding in that he failed to produce certain books and papers does not waive his right to have the proceedings conducted according to Comp. L. 1897, § 10909, because of the fact that he had insisted that 1897 C. C. Rules 50-57 and Comp. L. 1897, §§ 198-203, applied.—Metheany v. Kent Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 628.

¶ 96. A failure to file interrogatories, as required by How. St., § 7275, and to allow the party proceeded against an opportunity to produce his witnesses, is an irregularity calling for a reversal of the final order adjudging him guilty of the contempt charged.—Latimer v. Barmore, 81 Mich. 592.

¶ 97. Where the petition for an order to show cause why the defendant in an injunction bill should not be punished for contempt sets out at length the facts in the case, and defendant, in his answer, does not deny the correctness of the material facts as stated, but interposes a defense the sufficiency of which is purely a question of law, the court may dispose of the proceeding without the framing of interrogatories or making an order of reference, especially where defendant makes no request therefor.—Smith v. Waalkes, 109 Mich. 16.

¶ 98. Under How. St., § 7260, providing for contempt proceedings in case of refusal to obey an order to pay costs or other sums of money, a husband may be committed for contempt for refusal to obey an order requiring him to pay suit money to his wife's attorneys pending divorce proceedings, and the filing of interrogatories and opportunity to produce witnesses are not necessary in such proceeding.—Ervay v. Ervay, 120 Mich. 525.

¶ 99. Comp. L. 1897, § 10909, referring to civil contempt has no application to criminal contempt, so as to require opportunity of having interrogatories furnished to a witness summoned to appear and show cause and to produce books; his rights are regulated by Comp. L. 1897, § 1098.—In re Archer, 134 Mich. 408.

¶ 100. In a proceeding under Comp. L. 1897, § 10891, for contempt of court in intimidating witnesses, in which a petition was filed based upon information and belief and accompanied by affidavits, it was proper practice for the court, who treated the proceeding as a criminal one, to appoint an attorney to prepare interrogations based upon the affidavits filed; and the party charged having fully answered and the court having examined the affidavits and interrogatories, and determined that they were sufficient, he was not required to allow other interrogatories prepared by the petitioner.—Russell v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 624.

§ 31. Hearing or summary commitment.

When done in presence of court, see post § 32.
Commencement by affidavit or summary commitment, see also ante § 25.
Necessity of prior notice or order to show cause, see ante § 26.
Record of summary commitment, see post § 37.
Time and opportunity for defense, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12270.
Affidavits in defense, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12286.
Before justices, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXIX, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 14444.
Of witnesses for refusal to answer, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 75 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12563 et seq.

¶ 101. A hearing and opportunity for defense or excuse is necessary before one can be imprisoned under Comp. L. 1857, § 4077 (How. St., § 7260) for refusal to obey an order for the payment of temporary alimony, etc.—Steller v. Steller, 25 Mich. 159.

¶ 102. The refusal of a court to give the respondent in a proceeding, as for a criminal contempt after the return of an order to show cause, a reasonable time in which to prepare his defense, and to proceed forthwith to adjudge him guilty on his admission of the publication of the alleged contemptuous matter, is erroneous.—In re Dingley, 182 Mich. 44.

§ 32. ——Contempt in presence of court.

Provision for summary commitment, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12269.

¶ 103. A circuit judge may take cognizance of his own knowledge of contempts committed during the sitting of the court, and in its "immediate view and presence," and may proceed to punish summarily persons guilty of such contempts, basing his action entirely upon his own knowledge.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

¶ 104. The circuit court may on its own motion punish as for a contempt a person who attempts, by bribing a juror, to bring about a disagreement of the jury in a pending suit; and this though such attempt has not injured either party.—Langdon v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 76 Mich. 358.

¶ 105. Where criminal contempt is direct the court of its own motion acts summarily in its punishment; if constructive the court upon petition or affidavits present by warrant or attachment brings the offending party before it to answer the charges preferred against him.—In re Smith, 144 Mich. 39.

§ 33. Issues and questions considered.

See also ante ¶ 7.

¶ 106. Whether a freight tariff applies to the branch lines of a carrier held a question for the State Railroad Commission, and not for the court in a proceeding against the carrier for contempt in failing to obey a writ of mandamus requiring it to put the tariff into operation.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 185 Mich. 649.

¶ 107. On a proceeding for contempt in violating an injunction against interference with possession of land, it cannot be claimed that the bill did not show complainant in possession of the land where the bill expressly alleged that as a fact and on a motion to dissolve the possession was found in complainant; such question is for the chancery court on the hearing of the motion, and will not be reviewed.—Swett v. Thorkildsen, 115 Mich. 314.

¶ 108. The determination of the circuit court in chancery as to whether a creditor's bill should be dismissed on the ground that there was an adequate remedy at law cannot be attacked in a proceeding to adjudge the defendant guilty of contempt in refusing to comply with an order made requiring him to execute an assignment to a receiver.—Twombly v. Klersy, 146 Mich. 648.

§ 34. Evidence and burden of proof.

Interrogatories in chancery proceedings, see ante § 30.
Proof by admissions in open court, see post § 35.
Weight and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 36.

¶ 109. A party who alleges that an injunction has been violated, and proceeds for the contempt to punish the offender, must show with reasonable certainty the facts by which the charge may be established.—Verplank v. Hall, 21 Mich. 469, rehearing denied 22 Mich. 80.

¶ 110. In an application to punish a wife for contempt where she had refused to pay over to her husband a sum awarded him in divorce proceedings, and wherein the trustee in bankruptcy of the husband had joined, it was proper to admit evidence of the latter's relation to the case, where it had been alleged in the application, accompanied by a certified copy of the order of appointment, and the wife's answer admitted it.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

§ 35. ——Confessions or admissions.

See also post ¶ 112.
Insufficiency of bare admission of fact, see also ante ¶ 102.

¶ 111. In a proceeding as for contempt to enforce a civil remedy a solicitor has no authority to make admissions for his clients; they can be bound only by written admissions, made part of the record, so as to be examinable on appeal; so held where a solicitor admitted the truth of the facts alleged as the basis for contempt proceedings, but denied their legal sufficiency.—Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532.

§ 36. ——Weight and sufficiency.

Sufficiency of showing for issuance of attachment, see ante § 27.
As to validity of judgment disobeyed, see also post ¶ 124.

¶ 112. Under How. St., § 7259, requiring "due proof" of the facts charged as contempt of court where the alleged misconduct is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, one is improperly adjudged guilty of contempt for violation of an injunction, where the case against him of interfering with possession of a church rests entirely upon his own testimony, and where such testimony, though in some respects evasive, fails, when taken as a whole, to make out the alleged violation and shows that he counseled against a riotous invasion and went on the premises afterwards at invitations of officers called to restore order.—Richter v. Kabat, 114 Mich. 575.

¶ 113. Decree adjudging defendants to have been guilty of contempt in violating an injunction, affirmed against a contention by one that he was not shown to have participated in the disobedient act.—Rummell v. Lam, 110 Mich. 685.

¶ 114. An order adjudging a defendant guilty of contempt for the failure to appear before a circuit court commissioner in a receivership proceeding, cannot be attacked because the commissioner had no proof of service of the order appointing the receiver, where it appears that such order directed the commissioner to issue a summons upon request, and such order was before the commissioner.—Central Nat. Bank of Cleveland v. Graham, 118 Mich. 488.

¶ 115. The bill and affidavit accompanying it make a prima facie case for injunction, where, in certiorari brought for the review of contempt proceeding under such injunction, they show that the complainant is the owner in fee of a certain island and the fishing rights pertaining thereto and has been for upwards of twenty years, that the fishing rights are worth $1,000 annually, that defendant had leased such rights for the year past but that his lease had expired, and that defendant was guilty of frequent trespasses both on the island and in the fishing grounds; and that defendant intends to continue these trespasses unless restrained, to the irreparable loss to complainant, and that defendant is wholly irresponsible financially.—Saginaw Lumber & Salt Co. v. Griffore, 145 Mich. 287.

¶ 116. Evidence held sufficient to justify an order adjudging a person guilty of contempt in violating an injunction restraining him from interfering with the complainant's possession of land as administrator.—

Michigan Trust Co. v. McNamara, 182 Mich. 424.

¶ 117. An affidavit filed by a defendant on an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in failing to obey an order of the court to produce certain books and papers which recites that since the making of the order he had not had possession or control of the books or papers, and since the order was made he has made every effort to comply with it but was unable to do so, and he was informed that the books and papers were in the possession of a named person outside the jurisdiction of the court and beyond his own control, is insufficient as being too indefinite and evasive, and the court was justified in disregarding it.—Metheany v. Kent Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 628.

¶ 118. On a bill to punish a member of defendant union for the violation of an injunction restraining interference with complainant's employees the court found that the lower court had jurisdiction to issue the injunction, and to determine in the contempt proceeding whether defendant was guilty of a wilful disobedience thereof, and that defendant had committed acts specifically forbidden by the injunction.—Enterprise Foundry Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, Local No. 186, 149 Mich. 31.

§ 37. Judgment, commitment and record.

Necessity of finding to sustain sentence of reimbursement of injured party, see post § 42, ¶¶ 134, 139.

Requirement that admissions be of record, see also ante ¶ 111.

Adjudgment of contempt on appeal leaving punishment for court below, see Appeal, ¶ 614.

Specifying indemnity or reparation to be made, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12290.

¶ 118a. A sentence to pay a stated fine or in default to be imprisoned for a stated time of 24 hours is in the alternative and void under How. St., § 7235, which provides that the punishment may be by fine or imprisonment or both, and that on commitment for nonpayment of the fine the person shall be discharged at the end of 30 days.—Sloman v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 264.

¶ 119. An order imposing a fine for contempt of court, to be paid within fifteen days, and directing that defendant in default of payment within such time shall be committed to jail for thirty days, without providing for his release on payment of the fine, is bad as an alternative sentence.—Swett v. Thorkildsen, 115 Mich. 314.

¶ 120. An order providing that a person who had refused to pay over a certain sum of money be imprisoned on the failure to pay the same until the further order of the court is not indefinite, although Comp. L. 1897, § 10915, limits the punishment to six months, and section 10913 provides that one shall be imprisoned only until he shall have performed such act or duty.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 121. A finding, in a proceeding for contempt under How. St., ch. 256, that respondent brought a suit against receivers appointed upon the removal of assignees under an assignment for the benefit of creditors and prosecuted without leave of court, warrants an order restraining him from further prosecuting such suit, but does not authorize the court to impose a fine and imprisonment in default of payment thereof under How. St., § 7276, providing that if the court shall adjudge the defendant to have been guilty of the misconduct charged and such misconduct tended to or did impair or impede the rights of any party in a cause pending in the court, he may impose a fine or imprisonment.—In re Appeal of Smith, 86 Mich. 149.

¶ 122. A record of conviction of an attorney for contempt, punished summarily, may, perhaps, be comprehended in the single order and judgment.—Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 561.

¶ 123. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 1101, requiring the particular circumstances of the offense to be set forth in the commitment, an order that "it appearing that J. has committed the offense of contempt of court, therefore it is ordered," etc., is defective and will be vacated.—Tweddle v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 134 Mich. 237.

¶ 124. A bill for divorce, alleging that complainant and defendant lived together as husband and wife until defendant deserted and abandoned complainant, and that, some years before such desertion, defendant informed complainant that he had a former wife living, but had obtained a decree of divorce from her, of which he showed a copy, and that, after consultation, they deemed it unnecessary to have another marriage ceremony performed, and continued to live together as husband and wife until the husband's desertion—does not show the nonexistence of the marital relation, so as to render illegal a commitment for failure to comply with an order for temporary alimony based thereon.—Flanagan v. Flanagan, 116 Mich. 185.

§ 38. ——By justices of the peace.

See Jud. Act, chap. LXXIX, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 14445.

For refusal to answer as witness, see Jud. Act, chap LXXIX, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 14447.

¶ 125. How. St., § 7107, which extends somewhat the authority of justices of the peace in imposing sentences, does not apply to How. St. § 7077, which governs the imposition of sentence in proceedings for contempt.—Turner v. Smith, 90 Mich. 309.

¶ 126. A sentence by a justice of the peace for contempt under How. St., § 7077, that the respondent pay a fine of $25 within one hour, and in default of such payment that he be imprisoned in the common jail for a period of five days, is an alternative sentence and void.—Turner v. Smith, 90 Mich. 309.

When committed in presence of court, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12269.
By justices of the peace, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXIX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 14443.

¶ 127. A contempt proceeding based upon a violation of an injunction issued in a suit brought by the attorney general to enforce a judgment of ouster against a foreign corporation, is a proceeding to enforce a civil remedy within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, ch. 301, and hence the punishment is governed by the provisions of that chapter (Comp. L. 1897, § 10915).—In re Osborn, 131 Mich. 118.

¶ 128. Where the trial court gives a sentence for contempt of court not in excess of the penalties provided by statute, it is not that cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the constitution.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

¶ 129. Under How. St., §§ 7279, 7280, imprisonment can only be ordered until the fine is paid or the act performed, but not for a specific term.—Latimer v. Barmore, 81 Mich. 592.

§ 40. ——Extenuation and mitigation.

See also ante ¶ 20.
Of amount payable as indemnity, see post § 42.
Justification or excuse, see ante §§ 14-16.
Purgation by disavowal, see ante § 17.

¶ 130. Where it appeared that disobedience to a mandamus was due to bad advice of counsel rather than to wilful disregard of the order of the court, a severe fine was not inflicted upon the party guilty of contempt.—Burton v. Tuite, 80 Mich. 218.

¶ 131. Where in contempt proceeding to enforce a civil remedy, the court required respondent to pay into court a certain sum of money within forty days, or give bonds to produce it, or stand committed indefinitely, it was held that the statute did not permit such a vague sentence of imprisonment.—Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532.

¶ 132. How. St., § 7235, provides that contempts may be punished by fine not exceeding $250, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court, and that any one committed to prison for the nonpayment of any such fine shall be discharged at the expiration of thirty days, but this does not authorize a sentence imposing a fine to be paid within a specified time, and, in default of payment within that time, imprisonment for a certain number of days.—Sloman v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 264.

§ 41. ——Immunity from imprisonment.

Constitutional immunity from imprisonment for debt, see Constitutional Law, §§ 193, 194.
Statutory exception of contempt proceedings from prohibition for imprisonment for debt, see Jud. Act, chap. XLIV, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13631.

¶ 133. Comp. L. 1897, § 10342, sec. 45, prohibiting the imprisonment of a female on process in any civil action, is limited to writs of capias ad respondendum, ad satisfaciendum, and kindred process, and does not prohibit a court of chancery from enforcing its decrees and orders against female trustees to compel the delivery of securities or other property, or obedience to injunctions, by contempt proceedings.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

§ 42. Indemnity and reparation.

Advice of counsel as defense, see ante § 16.
Commitment for noncompliance with terms of reparation, see also ante ¶ 131.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. V, §§ 21, 22; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12288, 12289.
Assignment of bond to injured person, see Jud. Act, chap. V, 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12293.

¶ 134. To authorize under How. St., § 7277, the imposition, in lieu of a fine, of the costs and expenses incurred by the party injured by the misconduct complained of, there must be a finding by the court that an actual loss or injury has thereby been sustained.—Holland v. Weed, 87 Mich. 584.

¶ 135. Neither fine nor costs should be imposed for disobeying an injunction that was obtained by a fraud upon the court and where the party appealing for process of contempt has not been injured.—Holland v. Weed, 87 Mich. 584.

¶ 136. If a defendant disregards an injunction, and is adjudged guilty of contempt, the court may ascertain and order paid the damages suffered by complainant from the violation of the injunction.—Chapel v. Hull, 60 Mich. 167.

¶ 137. That one acted under counsel's advice in violating an injunction will not relieve him from paying the actual damage such violation caused.—Chapel v. Hull, 60 Mich. 167.

¶ 138. Where payment to the injured party is ordered a fine also cannot be imposed.—Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138.

¶ 139. In contempt proceedings to enforce civil remedies, respondent cannot be ordered to reimburse the moving party for the loss and injury which he claims to have sustained by respondent's misconduct, except upon a finding that respondent has been guilty of the contempt charged, that his misconduct has caused actual loss or injury, and of the amount of such injury.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 104 Mich. 411.

¶ 140. In contempt proceedings for the violation of an injunction, damages accruing before the injunction was violated cannot be recovered.—Wilkinson v. Dunkley-Williams Co., 150 Mich. 253.

¶ 141. Where a preliminary injunction in a patent case has been violated, the respondents will not be required to pay the patentee royalty where they were acting in an official capacity and derived no benefit from the infringement, and especially where there is reason to believe that they acted in good faith.—Phillips v. Detroit, 2 Flip. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 11101.

§ 43. Denial of relief as punishment.

¶ 142. A party in contempt is entitled to no favor from the court, such as reopening the case for proofs.—McClung v. McClung, 40 Mich. 498.

¶ 143. A defendant in contempt cannot move to set aside proceedings; but where he has simply failed to comply with the requirements of an interlocutory order, he may move to discharge the order for irregularity.—Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19.

§ 44. Review or supervision by Supreme Court.

Certiorari as proper method of review, see Certiorari, § 16.
Appealability of contempt orders, see Appeal, §§ 17, 36, ¶ 144.
Habeas corpus to liberate person committed illegally, see Habeas Corpus.
Declination on mandamus to vacate contempt proceedings of questions of validity of anterior proceedings, see Mandamus, V.

¶ 144. Under Const., art. 6, § 3, and How. St., § 8577, the Supreme Court has supervisory jurisdiction by original writ to inquire into the justice or propriety of proceedings in contempt, whether before or after commitment, only so far as to ascertain whether the court below has jurisdiction, and is proceeding according to law. But the question of jurisdiction necessarily involves an inquiry whether the conduct alleged was in fact a contempt of the court, and committed under circumstances which authorize it to proceed to punishment therefor, and whether the court is proceeding in the manner prescribed by law.—In re Wood, 82 Mich. 75.

¶ 145. The Supreme Court will not review the evidence to determine whether a sentence and fine for contempt should have been less severe.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

¶ 2. The right to continue is incident to the power to hear and determine causes.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374.

¶ 3. The matter of the continuance of causes is one resting in the sound discretion of the court, which is not reviewable except where there is the clearest evidence of wilful or wanton disregard of justice or a mistake of law.—McNaughton v. Evert, 116 Mich. 141.

¶ 4. The denial of a request for a postponement of trial is within the discretion of the trial court, and such discretion is not reviewable unless abused.—Winklemeir v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 621.

¶ 5. A court may deny a continuance or other discretionary relief sought by a plaintiff guilty of laches.—Sayre v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 199 Mich. 414.

§ 3. Grounds and occasions in general.

Various specific grounds, see post §§ 4-7.

¶ 6. The denial of a continuance on the ground that the case was not in condition for lack of pleadings to be noticed for the then term of court, was not error where defendant failed to comply with Cir. Ct. Rule No. 10, providing that when a declaration is amended after plea or demurrer, such plea or demurrer shall stand to the amended declaration unless defendant shall within 10 days after receiving such amendment, file another plea or demurrer, but where such defendant filed his plea 35 days after the amendment and not until the case was called for trial.—Marvin v. Bowlby, 135 Mich. 640.

¶ 7. In a suit for money had and received, where credits are sought to be shown in order to rescue the claim from the operation of the statute of limitations, and where the defendant is surprised and unable to go forward for want of preparation, application can be made by the defendant to the trial court for time in which to prepare to meet the unexpected claim.—Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

¶ 8. A husband and wife were killed in the same accident. The husband left a will making his wife his beneficiary therein. The probate court entered an order distributing the husband's estate upon a petition filed by his administrator. The complainant appealed from this order to the circuit court. The wife's administrator did not appear in either court to raise the question of survivorship. The husband's administrator appeared to raise this question in the circuit court. Complainant denied his right so to do, and demanded a continuance. Held, the circuit judge properly exercised his discretion in denying the continuance.—In re Parr's Estate, 161 Mich. 244.

§ 4. ——Amendment of pleadings or issues.

Continuance as condition of leave to amend, see Pleading, VI, C.

¶ 9. An amendment, at the trial, of the declaration, materially changing the issue, entitles defendant to a continuance with costs for the term.—Jennings v. Sheldon, 53 Mich. 431.

¶ 10. Where a declaration on an insurance policy is amended to admit evidence of proofs of loss, a continuance should be granted.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

¶ 11. A formal amendment, such as an allegation of due care, is properly made at the trial, and is no ground for continuance.—Milliken v. City of St. Clair, 136 Mich. 250.

¶ 12. In an action against a city for injuries alleged to have been caused by falling over a loose plank upon the sidewalk, the court properly permitted an amendment without a continuance so as to allege that the plank was part of the walk since the declaration, in fact, needed no amendment.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 130 Mich. 107.

¶ 13. If a certain specific charge of negligence be changed by amendment at the trial to a substantially different charge of negligence, the defendant must be allowed time to make further preparation for defense.—Ruscyk v. Detroit United Ry., 180 Mich. 399.

¶ 14. Where the purchaser from a retailer of a fur coat is poisoned by the dye on the coat and avers in his declaration that defendant who sold the coat to the retailer was a manufacturer, and an amendment is permitted at the close of all the evidence to obviate a variance from proof that defendant was a jobber and wholesaler, defendant's motion for a continuance, after a postponement of two days, properly supported by affidavits of surprise, inability to immediately procure witnesses and that plaintiff had notice that defendant was not a manufacturer, should be granted even though admissions were made to prevent continuance.—Gerkin v. Brown & Sehler Co., 177 Mich. 45.

¶ 15. A continuance should be granted in an action by a brakeman against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries sustained while cars are being shunted upon a switch where an amended declaration sets up an entirely different set of facts from that set up in the original declaration, and counsel state that they are not prepared to meet the new situation presented by such amended declaration.—Anderson v. Ann Arbor Railroad Co., 187 Mich. 211.

¶ 16. Where leave is granted to amend a declaration as of a certain day, and the purport of the amendment is fully stated and consented to by the defendant, the fact that the written amendment was not served on the latter until a few days before the case came on for trial at a subsequent term, does not entitle him to a further continuance.—Paskvan v. Allouez Min. Co., 185 Mich. 329.

§ 5. ——Absence of party or counsel.

Sickness or disability, see post § 6.
Absence of witnesses or evidence, see post § 7.
Showing to obtain continuance, see post § 9.

¶ 17. Where counsel for one party entered upon the trial of a case knowing that their client, who was not a witness, was absent from the city, held that the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to hold the case open until the party arrived when there was no absolute assurance by counsel that he would arrive at the time stated.—Bennett v. Denton, 194 Mich. 610.

§ 6. ——Sickness or disability.

Affidavit of illness, see post § 9.

¶ 18. After complainant tendered an issue to defendant he was afflicted with paralysis and his condition gradually grew worse. The case was continued from time to time for several years until finally upon refusal of complainant's counsel to suggest a guardian, or to try the case without the appointment of a guardian, or to dismiss the suit, the court refused a further continuance. Held, that the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing a further continuance.—Lamoreaux v. Eggleston, 171 Mich. 201.

§ 7. ——Absence of witnesses or imperfection of evidence.

Illness of witness, see also post ¶ 28.
Sufficiency of showing, see post § 9.
Admission to avoid continuance, see 1916 C. C. Rule 41, § 1.

¶ 19. An adjournment of the trial until the following day should have been granted so that a witness who had gone from Detroit to Windsor, Canada, could be produced in order to contradict another witness on a very material fact.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 76 Mich. 338.

¶ 20. Refusing to continue a case where the defendants have entered into trial believing a witness is available and afterward found that he is out of town, is not an abuse of discretion.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 125 Mich. 373.

¶ 21. The probability that a party will attend court during the trial of his own cause may excuse a failure to exercise the diligence usually required in securing attendance of witnesses in order to obtain a continuance.—Bauer v. Bauer, 177 Mich. 169.

¶ 22. Where a case was called for trial one day earlier than it was set down for and the defendant, in the exercise of diligence, was unable to procure the attendance of a material witness who had left the state, held that the refusal of the trial court to grant a brief adjournment so that such witness could be produced was reversible error.—Dering v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 238.

¶ 23. In an action on a life insurance policy, held that it was an abuse of discretion on part of the trial court in refusing a continuance to allow defendant an opportunity to perfect the certification of depositions necessary for its defense.—Christophersen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 634 (Moore, J., dissenting).

¶ 24. Where a plaintiff in asking to withdraw a juror on the ground of the absence of a witness gives no excuse except that he did not suppose the witness would be needed so soon, the trial court properly refuses the request.—Howcroft v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 608.

¶ 25. It is not error to refuse continuance for the purpose of procuring the attendance of a medical witness whose testimony would have been incompetent except as to facts admitted by the other party.—Meyer v. Knott, 137 Mich. 714.

Begole v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 32 Mich. 61.

¶ 27. Defendant's motion for a continuance in an action for conversion, made after the plaintiff's proof is all in and without any showing, is properly overruled, although the court has in effect allowed plaintiff to amend his declaration with reference to the time of the conversion.—Crane Lumber Co. v. Bellows, 116 Mich. 304.

Showing required, see 1916 C. C. Rule 41, § 1.
Showing and admission to avoid continuance, see 1916 C. C. Rule 41, § 1.

¶ 28. The fact that an application for a continuance is supported by an affidavit setting forth the serious illness of a witness whose testimony is alleged to be material does not render its denial an abuse of discretion where two continuances have already been granted the affiant, and no showing is made by him, aside from his statement, that the testimony of the absent witness is material, and the circumstances surrounding the case are such as to cast doubt upon the good faith of the application.—McNaughton v. Evert, 116 Mich. 141.

¶ 29. The denial of a continuance was not error, where the motion was not made till the second week of the term, and no excuse was shown for delay in making the motion the first day of the term, under C. C. Rule 22.—Schurtz v. Kelley, 119 Mich. 383.

¶ 30. Where in a suit for commissions a witness subpoenaed for plaintiff fails to appear, it is not error for the trial court to refuse to postpone the trial or to grant a new trial upon such ground, where it is not made to appear that the witness would or could give any testimony concerning a material disputed issue of fact, and where the trial court in the midst of the trial learns for the first time that such witness was subpoenaed or expected to be at court for either party.—Roney v. Healy, 170 Mich. 46. (Moore, C. J., and Steere and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 31. An application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness cannot be successfully opposed where the affidavit in opposition to the continuance sets up that the absent witness is the husband of affiant who will not consent to his testifying, but does not make it appear upon what subject the witness will testify, nor show such a statement of facts as to take the case out of Comp. Laws 1897, § 10213, How. 2nd Ed., § 12857, which restricts married persons from testifying for or against each other.—Snyder v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 546.

Review of grant or denial of continuance, see Appeal, § 396.
Presumption on appeal as to continuances, see Appeal, § 367.

¶ 32. In the absence of a prompt waiver by the moving party of a continuance of a case, the order therefor must be regarded as absolute, and the clause respecting the payment of costs as indicating the terms upon which the continuance is granted. The words used must be treated as words of agreement, rather than of condition.—Barney v. Love, 101 Mich. 543.

§ 11. Conditions and terms.

Refusal of continuance on any terms as inviting subsequent error or as making prior errors harmless, see Saving Questions for Review; Harmless Error.
Continuance as condition of leave to amend, see Pleading, VI, C.
Vacation or attachment for nonpayment of costs imposed, see 1916 C. C. Rule 41, § 2.

¶ 33. Execution does not lie to enforce an order imposing costs as a condition to a continuance, when the continuance has been waived.—People ex rel. Henderson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 244.
